Grace Merritt's tour in "When Knighthood Was in Flower" last season was one of the really noteworthy successes of a rather dull theatrical year. At the opera house to-night.
Yesterday came near being without its usual runaway and the nearest approach to excitement in that line was when Bennie Roberts had a little difficulty with Dr. Goodrich's faithful nag. Bennie was driving up North Main street and when opposite the Worthens block the horse tipped the sleigh over in some way and Ben was dropped in the slush. He hung to the reins and had the pleasure of being dragged along the wet street prone upon his stomach, but still hanging to the ribbons and shouting "whoa" at the top of his voice. The steed was at last brought to a standstill and the sleigh righted, and Bennie continued on his way. But his troubles were not yet over, for upon reaching the Elm street turn, through some miscalculation, his sleigh collided with a load of hay and the sleigh was again overturned. Assistance was given and the sleigh, which had been somewhat broken in the second mix-up, was repaired, and the street again assumed its normal appearance.
