IS DANCING DEGENERATING?

Berlin International Choreographic Congress to Discuss the Question.

A special feature of the International Choreographic Congress to be held in Berlin in July, will be a discussion of the question, "Is Dancing Degenerating?"

In addition to the French, German and Russian dances, the speakers will take up the various American dances, especially the "Boston," and adaptation of the waltz. In an interview, M. Lefort, secretary of the French Choreographic association, solemnly declared that the art of dancing "threatens to lose all its charm if something be not done in time." And he continued:

"Either dancers turn like teetotums with stiffened joints, or they make violent efforts to look graceful, with still more dire results, keeping about, contorting themselves and gesticulating grotesquely. This, sir, is a lamentable state of things. Dancing should, above all, have grace and elegance, and should impart distinction to the bearing. The dancer should study to acquire elasticity and suppleness of movement, not the habit of disarticulating his or her limbs—a most disastrous practice."

"Department is the first thing to be learned and it will be useful to the proficient pupil in all walks of life. It was thus in the olden times, in the days of Prevot, of Talant, de Desart, and of Guillaume Raynal, who were dancing masters at the court of King Louis XIV, who founded the academy of dancing. Then the minuet, the gavotte, the pavana, the passepied and the forlane were danced. What could be more exquisite? But in 1809 the polka was introduced in France. That was the beginning of the end. To dance the polka the man held his partner around the waist. The novelty of the thing pleased the popular imagination. Good-by then, to the beautiful old dances in which partners just touched the tips of each others' fingers. The mamurka, the schottische followed, and the waltz imported by Desart from Russia."

"Nowadays—would you believe it?—when a man comes to us to learn dancing he generally stipulates that he is to be taught only those dances in which he holds the girl around the waist! What have we come to! Still, there are hopes, after all. In the last few years some little has been done to restore to the art of dancing its pristine nobleness. Setting aside the inexpressible vogue, now happily past, of the negro's cakewalk, we observe that the 'Boston' is increasingly popular in drawing-rooms. The 'Boston' comes from America. Let us thank the Americans, not for the step, which they did not invent, as it is none other than our own old-fashioned redowa, but for the development which they have given it, and which makes it an admirable physical exercise."

"The 'Boston' gives breadth of movement and expands the chest and lungs. This year we started with considerable success a new dance, 'the wave,' a kind of more undulating and gliding 'Boston,' recalling the rhythm of the sea, hence its name. Next winter we intend to revive the old dances of France, the pavana and the gavotte, for instance, and we shall require our pupils to sing while dancing, a most graceful practice, and one calculated to develop the chest. That will be the chief article of our program at the Berlin congress."—Paris correspondent of New York Times.

Japanese Compositors.

Japanese "types" have their troubles. K. Sugimura, literary editor of the Tokyo Asahi Shimbun, says that he especially admires the linotype typesetting machines. "Unfortunately we are unable to use them in Japan, for our language has forty-seven letters, as well as over 3,000 Chinese characters, and such a number of types is, of course, beyond the capabilities of any machine yet invented. In the printing office of our newspaper in Tokyo the compositor must often walk the whole length of the room to fetch one character, instead of standing in one place before a single case, as the English or American compositor can do."

Even In Bedlam.

The manager of the insane asylum frowned. "What is that woman in cell 77 howling and shrieking about?" he asked impatiently. "She objects to her straitjacket, sir," the keeper answered. "Wants it taken off, eh? Well she can't!"

"No, it isn't that, sir," the keeper interrupted. "She wants it changed for one with the fashionable sleeves that have just come in."
