THE NECK RUFF.

It Reached its Full Glory in the Sixteenth Century. One of the most peculiar and interesting evolutions in historic fashion is the growth and development of the ruff in England. This ruff began its career as a humble little something like a tuck running along the top of the chemise from shoulder to shoulder. You can see it grow in the portraits of royal personages slowly, but surely, like a great linen flower opening its plumed petals from generation to generation. During the reign of Henry VIII. it was scarcely more than a budding excrescence, but with Henry VIII. it had outgrown its tuck stage to the extent of reaching up to the ears and was beginning to sport a mild flare. Those were the days of such strict sumptuary laws that in order to wear black gaudy you must be royal, to wear sable you must outrank your vassal neighbor, to wear mar ten or velvet trimmings you must be able to show an income of over 200 marks a year. The reign of Edward VI. and Queen Mary merely fostered the ruff without encouraging it to any greater development. But Queen Elizabeth, seeing in it possibilities for offsetting her red hair and clear skin, fanned it into vigorous life. In the sixteenth century the ruff burst into full bloom. Men and women, even tiny princesses, were overshadowed by the stiff rays of the ruff on all great occasions. Even over France, Germany and Italy it spread its white pinions and held unquestioned sway until it fell with the Roundheads.

One of the problems at Brightlook hospital, St. Johnsbury, has been solved by E. M. Taft who not only gave his personal supervision to the work, but paid all the bills which amounted to several hundred dollars. The work consisted of extensive grading around the building, constructing a winding road of easy grade from the street, and greatly improving the grounds in front of the hospital. The work involved some blasting and cutting down a knoll which partially obscured the north end of the building.

WOOD IN BUILDINGS.

A Forecast of the Day When It Shall Be Totally Banished. In all the comment on the decreasing use of wood in building, scarcely a word has been said about the effect on the carpenter. Concrete, stone, brick and steel are replacing the material that is conveniently easy to cut and fatally easy to burn, and while the general population of the country increased by 14,000,000 during the decade between 1890 and 1900, the number of carpenters actually decreased, the figure standing at 618,000 in 1890 and 600,000 in 1900. Some might think that in the face of these facts the carpenters would oppose the growing use of fireproof materials. We are assured, however, that no such sentiment is felt. "Our carpenters and builders," it says, are actuated by a progressive and open-minded spirit. And further:

"We all look forward gladly to the time of better and more substantial building. As far as the builders of this country are concerned, there is no need of the Bostonian horror to impress on them the desirability of fireproof construction for all classes of buildings. The use of fireproof material means unquestionably an improvement in building construction. The building trades are so closely allied that improvement in one line means improvement in all. "We want to take the stand strongly and unequivocally that universal fireproofing does not sound the deathknell of carpentry. We see no reason for the carpenter to be dismayed at the present change and tendency in building construction. The increasing use of concrete and of terra-cotta and of steel presents new problems to the carpenter, but it does not eliminate him; far from it. True it is, there will be less work for the 'wood butcher,' but more for the skilled woodworker. The fine interior woodwork for a well-constructed residence of cement and steel will unquestionably be more valuable to the carpenter than the whole of a cheaply built frame house. This work will be of a finer grade, requiring greater skill, and paying him bigger money than ever before. As for the 'wood butcher,' none of us will regret to see him go, nor will we miss him when he's gone. But we must all turn in and dig—to keep out of that class! Satisfaction with present knowledge and skill will not do. Conditions are changing; yet we feel sure that carpentry is here to stay. Our carpenters are the most progressive workmen in the world; they stand ready now to do their share, and more, toward better and more substantial building."—American Carpenter and Builder.

THE JEALOUS GRAYHOUND.

A tragedy recently happened in the study of M. Clemenceau, the French premier. He had two favorite dogs, one a splendid griffon and the other an equally fine Russian greyhound. M. Clemenceau lavished attentions on the griffon regardless of the significant growls of the greyhound. The griffon had been favored with several chocolates more than the greyhound. In a burst of jealousy the greyhound thrust itself upon its too fortunate rival and strangled it.

Faking Butterflies.

As the collecting of butterflies grows more popular, says an expert, more and more butterfly fakers turn up. These men, with various aniline dye powders, color up an insect valued at 10 cents into a good resemblance worth nearly $10. Their work is hard to detect for the reason that when the dye rubs off and discolors one's fingers one suspects nothing, since the genuine stuff belonging to every butterfly's wings would do the same thing.—London Globe.

Arab Greetings.

The Arabs show their friendliness when meeting by shaking hands six or eight times. Arabs of distinction go beyond this; they embrace each other several times.

THE NEW HOTEL ALBERT. New Use For Gum. A member of the firm of Romandka Bros. received an order one day last week that he could not fill. A woman came into his place of business and handed him a card, on which was a chewing gum model. "I have lost the key to my trunk," she said, "and I pushed that gum into the lock and got a model of it. I suppose you can make me a key that will unlock my trunk with that model to go by, can you not?" Mr. Romandka owned that he could not. The gum was in a rather pliable condition, he told the customer, from the heat, and he would fit a key by another method. The woman was satisfied, and Mr. Romandka dispatched a man with a bunch of trunk keys to try the lock till he found one which fitted.—Milwaukee Free Press.

ABOUT THE STATE.

W. H. Bishop, patent attorney, of Washington, D. C., reports the issue of a combined hat, coat, and umbrella rack to John Crozier and Leoblan Stuart of Montpelier.

R. F. Bowman, of Randolph, has made arrangements for the veterans' union at Barnard August 5. Prominent state speakers will be present. It is expected that large delegations from the surrounding towns will attend.

State Geologist G. H. Perkins, of Burlington has examined a deposit of asbestos on the Vase farm in Mechanicville and pronounces it to be of excellent quality and the quantity sufficient to warrant its development.

Bearded Indians. It has been written over and over again that the North American Indian was always beardless. Now light comes from an unsearched letter from Captain Amos Stoddard, United States artillery and engineers, in 1806, to Dr. Mitchell of New London, Conn., in which Stoddard tells of a tribe of "yellow men, not in the least hairy, who lived near the lake on the west side of the Rocky or Shinning mountains and who wore their beards and a great number of whom had red hair on their heads." They were great experts with the bow and arrow. The lake referred to must have been Flathead lake, in northwestern Montana.—New York Press.
