A Matter of Judgment.

[Copyright, 1906, by American Press Association.]

"What's judgment," said one of a party of men sitting in a club cafe discussing the business of a certain prominent speculator, "but good luck? One may deliberate profoundly between different courses possible in a certain case, adopt that which common sense would indicate and yet go wrong. Judgment is like logic, which grinds out conclusions according to the premises put in its hopper. Judgment tells us the best way of action, but doesn't guarantee it to be the successful way. I once had an illustration of this to my cost.

"Before going down from the dressing room of Mr. Jack Williams' musical I stepped into the bathroom to rinse my hands. There on the marble washstand was a large old-fashioned seal ring.

"Two courses suggested themselves to me—one to take the ring downstairs and give it to the host, telling him where I had found it. But it occurred to me that if the person who had lost it should return for it and catch me in the act of picking it up he might accuse me of stealing it. I'm a practical chap and don't believe in doing people unasked favors. Such kindnesses are liable to verify Aesop's fable of the man who warmed a frozen serpent in his bosom and was bitten for his pains. The other plan was to let the ring lie where it was, an act that I grant was not as kindly as the other, but safer. What do you think, gentlemen?"

"I think," said one, "that you ran no especial risk in either case, but any possible distressing consequences to you would surely be averted by letting the ring alone."

"The others agreed to this.

"Very well," the first speaker proceeded. "I followed this course. I left the bathroom and the ring in it and went downstairs. There were no guests in the dressing room at the time—indeed, there was no one, so far as I knew, on the second floor. I was late, and the guests had arrived. At the foot of the staircase I met a gentleman named Stewart going up. He was evidently in a hurry, and it occurred to me that it was he who had left the ring on the washstand and that he was going up to get it. He looked at me with an expression that indicated these words, 'He has just come from the dressing room and possibly the bathroom, where I left my ring.' But we are so prone to attribute to others what is in our own minds that I banished the thought.

"It was two or three days after the incident I have related that I received a call from Jack Williams. He hemmed and hawed and beat about the bush for a time, then told me that at his party a Mr. Stewart had left in the bathroom a ring that had been handed down to him through several generations and which he would not have parted with for a small fortune. He had missed the ring within a few minutes after he had left it, having taken it off his finger to wash his hands, and hurried back to get it. Williams didn't mention Stewart's having met me at the foot of the stairs, but I was sure Stewart had mentioned the fact to him. He said something more

How to Stretch Curtains.

When stretching curtains, especially those beginning to show a little wear, put a sheet on the floor and tack the most worn curtain down first, using bank pins to tack each scallop. Then hook the other curtains on the same as on stretchers. This method takes much less time. The curtains will be straight and of uniform size, as four curtains can be put down at once, and they will wear twice as long. Tack them down. Do not pin them, because when pinning the pins must be removed for each curtain and pinned back. Bank pins are sold in all department stores. They will not bend in tacking and can be used a number of times.

Where the Cook is Queen.

No two women can work just alike, as has been often proved, and the woman who jeers at another because she rushes madly from carrots to cantaloupes and does not have her vegetables all in one place does not know what she is talking about, for she cannot know what trouble it is for some women to keep things in order and the tendency they have to get them mixed when they are all in what they call a clutter. Each cook must work out her own method, and the lady of the house will do well to be satisfied with results and not criticize too closely methods that are not her own.

Tying Shoe Laces.

A way to keep shoe laces tied is to make a bow in the ordinary way, then insert a buttonhook underneath the center of the bow and draw one loop and one end through (underneath), thus turning the bow practically inside down, or draw one loop through the other and pull the "answering" end, so that the loops are knotted.

HALLOWEEN FAVORS

All Saints' Trimmings in Effective Color Combinations

RED AND BLACK SCHEMES.

Witch's Pie Covered with Crust of Paper and Filled with Surprise Packages—Ices Eaten from Small Pumpkins—Quaint Lights.

Halloween decorations and favors are particularly attractive this season, and many of the quaint and amusing figures are made from crumpled paper, as are the houses and table ornaments. These All Saints' trimmings are made in effective color combinations, such as yellow and black and red and black.

In the latter scheme of red and black a table could be prettily arranged with centerpiece and plate

The edge of the table would have alternative frills of deep valances of red and black paper.

For light red candles with shades to match, applied with black witches, would be effective.

Another form of decoration is the jack-o'-lantern mock pumpkins. Some of them are quite large. The pumpkin is cut to represent a face, while the nose is an immense red bulb. A tiny lighted candle is placed inside. Six or twelve of these would make an effective centerpiece. They should be set into a piece of wood covered with black and yellow paper and so arranged that they stand outward. The table decorations could be in yellow and black, and smaller pumpkins matching the larger ones might be used as bon-bon boxes. Instead of the red bulb the nose could be made of a bright, ripe, candied cherry. Children would vote these "quite too cute for anything." Ices would be eaten from small pumpkins, and tiny black cats could perch behind the name cards. Lights shining through yellow would shed a most effective glow over the yellow, red and black trimmings.

A pretty color scheme may be carried out in the shades of autumn foliage, the dollies and other table drapery to be of white crumpled paper printed in reds, yellows and browns. The centerpiece could be a small paper tree, the branches hung with favors tied in paper the color of the leaves. Each would be fastened to an end of ribbon, at the opposite end of which a stray leaf serving the purpose of a name card would be secured. The ice cups would be imbedded in nests of leaves, and the lighting would come through yellow shades.

At the solicitation of T. Jenkins Hains, Mrs. Hains said, she took a drink of whiskey, and then, at her husband's order, signed a paper which was not read to her. This, she believes, was the confession which they say she made.

"That night the post surgeon and some friends came and treated her for a wound over the eye, which Mrs. Hains said she received from the captain. Early the following morning, Capt. Hains and his brother entered, and, with a pistol, drove them out. 'My husband told me,' Mrs. Hains declared, 'that I would have to get out of the house the next day, and if my mother would not take me I should go and live with Annie. As my husband dropped his pistol to the floor, his brother said: 'Save that for the other party.'"

Continuing, Mrs. Hains denied that she had been guilty of any impropriety with Mr. Annis, and concluded: "I believe that my husband's act and the charges which he has made against me have been prompted by his brother, T. Jenkins Hains, who threatened to injure me for refusing his advances. He endeavored several times while my husband was away to make advances, going so far as to enter my room. I repulsed him, and he declared he would be avenged."

A SMART NEW BUCKLE.

Made of Beaten Gold and Worn With Moire Ribbon.

There are as many styles in buckles this season as there are in belts. All sorts of lovely ones are brought out to wear with brocade satin ribbon for empire gowns as well as plain moire belting for everyday suits.

Wonderful French ones set with brilliants are being placed on evening gowns made of satin and velvet. The buckle shown in the sketch is one of the very new shapes and is a return to an old fashioned art of the goldsmiths.

The loops and flowers are delicately bent together, and the whole effect is exceedingly dainty and light. The point goes below the waist when the buckle is worn at the waist line, but it is turned around when it is worn in the center of the back on an empire frock.

The web of our life is a mingled yarn, good and ill together—Shakespeare.

NO ALIMONY FOR MRS. HAINS

Her Petition in Divorce Case IS TURNED DOWN IN COURT

In an Affidavit in Reply to Her Husband's Divorce Suit, She Makes Serious Charges Against His Brother.

New York, Oct. 20.—The application of Mrs. Claudia L. Hains for alimony and counsel fees to defend a suit for divorce brought by Capt. Peter C. Hains, of the United States army, who is held for killing William E. Annis, was denied by Justice Carr in Brooklyn yesterday. Mrs. Hains' request that she be granted the custody of her children was also denied.

Annie Annis was named as co-respondent in Capt. Hains' suit for divorce. Justice Carr said that Capt. Hains has no means from which to pay either alimony or counsel fees, as his salary has been suspended since his imprisonment and his own small means are needed for his own defense. The court also gave as a reason that Mrs. Hains is in a comfortable home with her parents in Massachusetts.

"As to the custody of the children," said Justice Carr, "a similar embarrassment exists. The children are with the father's parents outside this state, and the defendant has no home in this state and declares that if she gets possession of the children she will take them to Massachusetts."

Mrs. Hains was given permission to renew her application if the conditions change enough to warrant it.

Mrs. Hains' affidavit in reply to her husband's divorce suit was made public yesterday. In it she declared that when Capt. Hains returned from San Francisco to Fort Hancock, on Sandy Hook, on May 29 last, he accused her of infidelity with William E. Annis, basing his allegation on a letter which Capt. Hains said he had received from his brother, T. Jenkins Hains. Mrs. Hains denied the accusation and at her suggestion Capt. Hains invited Annis to their home, after which all three went to Coney Island in Annis' automobile.

After they returned, Mrs. Hains avers, the captain and Annis sat up until 3 a. m., drinking and smoking, and seemed very friendly. She declares Capt. Hains did not show his brother's letter to Annis, nor ask him to explain the charges.

On the following day, Mrs. Hains said, her husband went to call on his father, P. C. Hains, returned at 2 a. m. on June 1, pulled her out of bed, and again accused her of having relations with Annis and threatened to shoot her.

Gen. Hains called that day, Mrs. Hains asserted, and upon hearing the captain's accusations, said he would shoot Annis on sight. Later that day, Capt. Hains' brother called with a lawyer and asked her a lot of questions while she was dazed.

Syrians Celebrate Following an Elopement, 100 Priests Participating.

St. Louis, Oct. 20.—A celebration of an extraordinary marriage was wound up here when Annie Elias, 12 years old, who eloped with Raman Mike, received the parental blessing. Annie is not yet out of short skirts, and has not given up her dolls.

The entire Syrian colony, including 100 priests, took part in the festivities, which have been going on two days without intermission. The amount of malt and spirituous liquors consumed is almost incredible. The drinkables consisted of:

Four thousand eight hundred large glasses of strong lager beer, 1,400 large tumblers of whiskey, 500 glasses of old wine, 500 glasses of proof fin. Exclusive of the wine, the drinks averaged 67 for each guest. The wine was not counted in making up the list.

Annie Elias is considered the most beautiful girl in the Syrian colony. It is the custom of Syrian parents to have their daughters marry when very young, and they do the choosing. Annie did not like the young man selected for her, because she loved Raman Mike. She and Raman eloped on October 16, the girl marrying the man of her choice in Sparta, Ill. Returning from their honeymoon, the young couple were dunned and overjoyed to be reunited with outstretched arms and a "God bless you, children!"

WIFE DEAD, COMEDIAN COLLAPSES

Earl Stirling Gives Way After Undergoing Terrible Strain.

Chicago, Oct. 20.—Earl Stirling, a member of the stock company at the College theatre, collapsed during the performance Sunday. Mr. Stirling's wife who was in a critical condition all last week, died Saturday. Because no understudy had been trained, Stirling was forced to enact a comedy role night after night and successive matinees with his wife at death's door.

Stirling played the part Friday night and then went to his wife. In his arms she breathed her last. Saturday afternoon he went through the performance and again at night without faltering or wavering, but the strain of the intense effort to keep his mind from thoughts of his wife was too great and he broke down under it Sunday.

RUSSIA TO QUIET PERSIA?

Intervention, It is Said, May be Necessary

SHAH DECLARED UNABLE

To Quell Disturbance—The Standard of Revolt Still Victorious—Expedition to South Planned by Leader of the Nationalists.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 20.—The Novoe Vremya in an editorial raises the question of Russian intervention in northern Persia, asserting that this may soon be necessary to prevent all of Persia falling a prey to anarchy, and to safeguard Russia's commercial and other interests there. The Novoe Vremya sees no hope of the shah's forces restoring order in the province of Azerbaijan. Satar Khan, the Constitutional leader, and his brigand followers, the paper says, intoxicated with victory, have established an autonomous government at Tabriz and are about to carry the standard of revolt into southern Persia, with fair chances of success. Russian trade has been completely paralyzed and the outbreak threatens to cross the frontier into the Caucasus.

URGES UNEMPLOYED TO STEAL

British Socialist Expelled from Commons Investigates Against Government.

London, Oct. 20.—A. V. Grayson, the Socialist member of the House of Commons, who was suspended Friday and who was publicly denounced by James Keir Hardie as a useless and irresponsible person, let his tongue wag Sunday night in his frenzy. Addressing a crowd of nominally unemployed men, the bulk of whom were street idlers, in a poor district of London, he violently let off his spleen against the Socialist-Labor members who did not support him in the House. He attacked John Burns, president of the local government board, and the king. Mr. Burns is visiting the king at Sandringham, which prompted Grayson to say, "Burns is in his proper position to-night, a flunkie to a general, useless parasite." He urged those who were starving or whose families were starving to steal from those who had food. He appealed to his hearers to accompany him and invade the House of Commons to put the fear of God in the hearts of the members. Grayson, who is hardly more than a boy, is a political laughing stock, but he may succeed in achieving the martyrdom of arrest for his speech.
