The turkey is casting his shadow before.

The Democratic national committee is still far from bankruptcy, with a balance of $1,234.71 on hand.

If those foot ball warriors go into their studies with the same vim as into their opponents, how pleased the professors will be!

Reasons multiply why Burlingtonians should drink water; the state board of health has pronounced the city water free from danger.

However skillful a man he may be on the golf links, Rockefeller is flubbing his drives badly under the searching eye of Prosecutor Kellogg.

The loss by death of the two assistant judges-elect of Washington county court makes serious inroads in the official lists of the county and deprives us of two worthy citizens. Judge Winch and Judge Richardson were both men to be respected.

THINGS WORTH "REPORTING."

We have received the following communication:

"My dear sir: It is true that you do not think the women of sufficient importance to report!"

"Some day newspapers will give us equal advantages with other public subjects. If I have been misinformed I shall be sorry I did not write you a note of thanks instead of this."

"Yours for justice, Annette W. Parmelee, Enosburg Falls."

We suspect that what Mrs. Parmelee is driving at is the report of her address before the Senate and House judiciary committees in defense of women's suffrage recently. And we beg leave to state that while The Times did not report her speech voluminously, it did devote double the space to it that a certain contemporary did, with a report Mrs. Parmelee holds up to us as exemplary. We are, therefore, forced to the conclusion that Mrs. Parmelee is misinformed. Incidentally, The Times may state that it has confidence in the discerning powers of its legislative correspondent and trusts him to give to each subject that space which the subject merits.

A VERMONT NEWSPAPER CHANGE.

The Morrisville Messenger makes announcement of its transfer to F. M. Crosby of Vergennes, the change to become effective on the first of December. The new proprietor of the Morrisville contemporary has been assistant editor of the Vergennes Enterprise and Vermont and knows the practical side of newspaper making as well, so that he assumes his new work with preparation. Editor Crosby has also served as alderman and bookkeeper in the Ancient City. In announcing the change The Messenger says: "Although a young man, his (Mr. Crosby's) experience has been ample in all the ways demand will fall upon him, and the business he will assume will be turned over to him under a belief that it could not be transferred into better hands."

With such a generous introduction does the retiring editor of The Messenger relinquish his work, and it is sufficient to cause other Vermont editors to extend a cordial greeting to the newcomer. Nevertheless, Editor Lambertson, who has so capably edited the paper for several years, has not announced his own intentions. The newspaper brethren will hope that his retirement from the control of

DEMOCRATS ON COMMISSIONS, ETC.

On general principles, it is a suggestion well made by the Vergennes Enterprise that Governor Prouty might with propriety have appointed a Democrat to the Champlain Tercentenary commission. Then, again, it may be possible that all the men considered by the governor to be the best fitted for the work on the commission happened to be Republicans.

WARMTH WITHOUT WEIGHT.

As one-third of our lives is spent in bed, we ought to take advantage of any improvements that make sleep more healthful and restful. There is a new comfort now that is entirely different from any other we have ever seen. It is so much lighter than the sleeper has so some of weight upon him, yet he is perfectly warm on the coldest night. People using these comforts say they can be compared only to the genuine eider-down of long ago. Every reader ought to see and feel them. Simply ask for the Mals Laminated Cotton Down Comfort at Perry's.

CURRENT COMMENT.

A Thrifty Legislature.

Our legislators are certainly thrifty in their own behalf, if not always in that of the state. They held a make-believe session today, attended by about one-fifth of its members, so that they could draw pay for the day—the vast majority having gone to their homes yesterday. And they will hold another make-believe session on Monday-week so as to enable them to draw pay for that day also.

When Officials Do Their Duty.

Some years ago the state officials whose duty it was to let the contracts for the state printing sent a good portion of the work to an Albany printing concern and the "holler" that was raised by a number of Vermont newspapers will be remembered by many citizens and particularly by the men whose conscientious observance of their oath of office was responsible for the change. In the light of the revelations at the State capital in regard to the printing trust during the present week it is perhaps well to remember this incident with the added comment that an official is not always immune from criticism when doing his duty.—Bennington Banner.

Reasoning Upon Immortality.

We have been treated of late to quite a succession of opinion from people of the highest intellectual attainments, that man does not exist beyond the grave. Ex-Governor Daniel H. Chamberlain, in the ripeness of his years, wrote down for posthumous publication his disbelief in the immortality of the soul. Not long since Goldwin Smith, viewing the matter from the light of 80 years of experience with life and 80 of conspicuous intellectual achievement, expressed himself in terms of the profoundest agnosticism. And only within three or four weeks it is made public, what his intimate friends had long known, that Charles Eliot Norton had no faith in the theory of immortality and no particular longing to cultivate such a faith.

On the other hand, ex-Senator William E. Chandler of New Hampshire talks to a farmers' meeting of his belief not only in immortality but transmigration and an expanding existence in one or more of the numberless worlds which evidently circle through the universe.

Mr. Chandler's opinion in such a matter is as good as that of the man of affairs and that of the great scholars who have been mentioned. And before them all may perhaps be preferred, as a guide to truth, the simple faith of the lowly workwoman who counts her beads and mutters her prayers as she toils faithfully and hopefully along; for even science is beginning to recognize the existence of a mind or being below that of the conscious mind—a subliminal self which becomes the more deeply hidden as the conscious mind develops, which seems to be stronger in women than in men, which is guided by intuitions and not by the reason, and which may be the larger and more essential part of the individual being, representative of the divine spirit in man. For has it not been written—and may it not have been with this consideration in mind—that the Lord of heaven and earth "hid these things from the wise and prudent and has revealed them unto babes?"—Springfield Republican.

JINGLES AND JESTS

The Night After Thanksgiving. Now on my breast doth heaviness And anxious sorrow sadly lie. 'Tis echo of last night's distress— I dreamed I was a chicken pie.

My crust was full, yet would not burst. Although I did not cease to strive, I felt their wings, and what was worst— Each mother's chick appeared alive!

In vain I sought to plunge a knife Where, where, where, where, where, where, I only managed in my strife To cast the bedclothes all away.

At last—I knew not when or how— This vision sauntered from my head. And yet I could not rest, for now I was a roasted pig instead.

My ears were decked with something green; I held an apple in my paws, And someone—meanest of the mean— Had jammed a lemon in my jaws!

I woke from this so swiftly drag My senses through a greater woo; I was all awed up in a bag— A pudding, I would have you know.

And now all earthly hope seemed past— I screamed and floundered, so they said. This morning, when I woke at last, I wished I had not gone to bed.—Judge.

He Takes After Mother.

The star pupil arose at the school entertainment to declaim his piece. "Lend me your ears!" he bawled. "Ha," sneered the mother of the opposition but defeated pupil, "that's Sarah Jane Doan's boy. He wouldn't be his mother's son if he didn't want to borrow something."—Tit-Bits.
