"Making Moving Pictures," a film at the Bijou theatre to-day, should be of great interest to every frequenter of moving picture shows. The picture very plainly shows every one of the many details in the process of making a modern film. "The Light House Keeper's Daughter" is a strong picture-drama, thrilling and intensely entertaining. There is another picture of unusual merit and a popular song in to-day's offering.

A report was circulated around the city to-day of the untimely demise of H. J. Smith. The report was going from person to person and seemed to be pretty generally credited. A Times reporter started out to investigate and found Mr. Smith in a local barber shop undergoing the finishing touches of tonsorial treatment. When asked in regard to the report, Mr. Smith emphatically denied the truth of the affair and stated that if he survived the treatment of the tonsorialist, he expected to live for some time.

The largest crowd of people that was ever gathered in the Congregational church was present at the Christmas concert given at 6 o'clock last evening. Every seat in the church was occupied, including the gallery, and many people who could not be seated stood in the back of the church throughout the exercises. The concert was one of the most elaborate ever given at the church, it taking nearly an hour and a half to complete the program, which consisted of recitations, songs, duets and several dialogues, in which the young people sang and acted out their parts in a very enjoyable and creditable manner. The church was prettily decorated with evergreen and epergreen trees and mottoes. The boys' orchestra accompanied the singing and also played several selections in a very pleasing manner. The young people who took part in the program were drilled by Miss Maude E. Harris, Miss Mary McDonald and Mrs. O. G. Stickney.
