The Bijou announces one of their new pictures to-day, "The Stowaway," a story dramatically and carefully told. It arouses the sympathy of the audience from the first turn of the reel. One can't help but see the true depth of the subject and feel more like laughing than we do ourselves after witnessing somebody else a great deal poorer off.

At the Comique to-day and to-morrow "The Day Case" is a notable production beyond any other railroad picture drama ever produced and along with it there is an admirably contrived story, thrilling in its nature and very convincing. "Show Your License," impressively funny in the convincing gravity with which it is handled. This comedy picture is a hit.

Scenes laid in the famous Black Hills along about 1867, when gold was first found there. Such is the foundation for the great sensational picture, "The Indian Runner's Romance," to-day at Dreamland. An old miner who has been secretly working a claim succumbs to the hardships and is attended in his last hours by a faithful Indian, to whom he reveals the whereabouts of his hidden mine. The Indian's squaw is abducted by a party of cowboys, who hope to force her to divulge the location of the mine. There is a most exciting pursuit of the renegades by the Indian, who, after many thrilling incidents overtakes the cowboy who carries the squaw on his horse. Leaping up behind him, a conflict ensues between them, astride the same horse, with squaw, bound hand and foot, lying across the animal's neck. The Indian is victor.
