THE DAWSONS' HONEYMOON COOK.

Conditions Changed So Much That She Concluded to Remain.

By HARRIET G. CANFIELD. They had been married two years, "long enough," Prue suddenly declared.

"Tom Dawson put down his evening paper and stared at the pretty little partner of his joys and sorrows. "I'm afraid I don't understand, dear," he said.

"Why, it's very simple. If you know that I care for you—and I am certain that you care for me—all signs of affection are quite superfluous. They may be dropped."

"Oh! Tom said dubiously. "Well, what shall I drop first?" There was a twinkle in his eyes, and Prue saw it. "To be serious," she pleaded, "to begin with, you must not kiss me when you come home to dinner—and—other times. You must drop—"

"Drop you a courtesy instead," he interrupted her laughingly. "Don't be ridiculous, Tom! You know very well that there are many useless customs that should be abandoned, many things that should be dropped."

"Yes," he said, smiling whimsically. "Hannah thinks so, I know. She dropped my meerschaum this morning. We must take lessons of that girl, Prue, or drop her. On the whole, I think she'd better drop her."

"It will not be necessary," she said with dignity. "Hannah gave notice this morning. I shall have to find some one else within a week."

"I'm sorry—sorry, I mean, for the family she'll drop down on next. Hannah's no featherweight, you know. Speaking of dropping—"

"I am not speaking of it now. It is quite useless while you are in such a mood," she said indignantly, rising from her chair.

Before she could leave the room Tom was at her side. "Forgive me, dear," he said. "I didn't know you were in such a sober earnest." He stopped to kiss the pink cheek next to him, but Prue lifted a protesting hand. "Don't, Tom," she said. "You forget. It isn't necessary."

"No, it isn't necessary"—the words came soberly enough now—"only sweet and natural."

And the next day, when the time came to say good-by, Prue had no occasion to complain of his honeymoon demonstrativeness.

"Tom is very sensible this morning," she said to herself, but she sighed as she said it and went about all day with a wistful look in her blue eyes. Tom was "sensible" in the evening also, and the next morning he was so very sensible that Prue cried a little, but perhaps it was for joy. Even "sensible" people do that.

That afternoon Matilda made her appearance. Hannah came into the sitting room to announce her arrival. "Matilda Stebbins is here, Mrs. Dawson," she said, "after my place. Will I show her to, ma'am? She and me used to work together once, and she's a dreadful good cook."

"Yes, I will see here," Prue said. And

CROWDS VIEW THE BOATS

Half Moon and Clermont Draw Great Crowds

Battleships Receive Visitors—Too Much Water for the Flying Events—The Crowds Are Enjoying New York Sights.

New York, Sept. 28.—Just as Saturday had been a day of warships and other sorts of boats, and Sunday had been a day of automobiles and every kind of conveyance which could be used for transportation, people up and down Riverside drive saw yesterday a day of umbrellas. They were there from every section of the country and represented every class of society.

Rain began falling shortly after noon and showers continued until dark. In spite of everything, however, it was a cheerful lot of sightseers that gathered along the waterfront or went out in launches to get a good view of the battleship fleet, both American and visitors. Sooner or later most of the people wandered to where the Half Moon and the Clermont were moored at the official landing place, 110th street, and tried to get aboard. A few had the proper passes from the committees in charge of each boat and succeeded, but the rest stood back of the police lines, upon the hill, and leaning over the wall made the same comments about the old-fashioned craft that others had made Sunday and still others had made on Saturday. All during the hours when the ships are open to the public, and particularly early in the afternoon, there were schools and shoals of small launches at the various landing places ready to take visitors out to the ships. Early in the afternoon a good many took launches and went aboard one or more of the vessels, although the British visitors were not yet open to the general public.

Simple Menus Desired.

Ogden, Utah, Sept. 28.—Capt. Archibald Butt, military aide to the president, has called a halt on the long banquets for the president and with the dishes voted for the unpronounceability of their names. Dinners were taking too much time and Captain Butt wired Secretary Carpenter that he request committees to make their eating occasions simple in menu and quick in service. This request may bar the Creole dishes at New Orleans and Possum in Augusta.

Yesterday Captain Butt received this telegram from the committee at San Antonio: "To settle question that is agitating our leading citizens, will you please wire whether the president prefers beef and cabbage rather than epicurean tidbits." Captain Butt replied that he did—that is, beef and cabbage.

Child Killed By Automobile.

New York, Sept. 28.—The two-year-old daughter of Giuseppe De Marco was killed yesterday by an automobile owned by James T. Lee, a lawyer. Frank Carlo, the chauffeur of the car, who disappeared after the accident, gave himself up later and was locked up on a charge of homicide. He declared that Lee's 100th street was so crowded with children that he ran his machine onto the sidewalk to avoid running down a dozen, and in doing so he struck the De Marco child.

MAGAZINE REVIEW

The Work of One River.

The hardest working river, the one most thoroughly harnessed to the wheels of labor in the United States, probably in the world, is the Blackstone. It is not a large river, either. Its drainage area is only about 458 square miles and in its power producing section it is only forty-three miles long; a very Tom Thumb of a river as rivers go in America. Yet the doughy little stream produces 23,000 horsepower, fifty for every square mile of its drainage area. If you will figure out the amount of horsepower in terms of coal you will find that the busy little stream represents a capitalization of about $25,000,000. This is twice the developed horsepower of any other important river.

Almost a hundred mills, catching with their whirling turbines the water almost from the very source in the city of Worcester, Massachusetts, line its banks and grow in size and importance till in Woonsocket and Pawtucket, Rhode Island, you have some of the largest of their kind in the country. A Library Worth While.

If a town library is awake to its opportunities, it may become one of the strongest forces in a community. Writing on this subject in Suburban Life for October, Miss Sarah B. Askew quotes one enterprising librarian as follows: "You know the minister says there is not a thing in this township this library hasn't its fingers in. Last winter we had a series of free lectures through the library, and two beautiful magic-lantern shows. We furnish teachers with books on pedagogy. We help the grange plan festivals and debates. We have a collection provided especially for the Village Improvement society. Our mayor insists we had the collection first, and provided the Improvement society for it, but that's not so. We borrow, through our inter-loan system, any book any one wants for study, from a treatise on guinea-pigs to Rousseau's music or civil engineering. At Christmas-time, we borrowed from the publishers a splendid collection of children's books, so that the mothers could look them over and choose something good. We lend mounted pictures to the schools, and sometimes to the people. We loaned pictures of birds and flowers to the children last spring, and got them to identify as many of them in the field as they could, with great success. We are trying to make them see how interesting everything around here is, and to know the birds and flowers and trees. I believe, when the children see the beauties around them, they won't want to leave us all."

No Alcohol!

Is alcohol a tonic? No! Does it make the blood pure? No! Does it strengthen the nerves? No! Is Ayer's Sarsaparilla a tonic? Yes! Does it make the blood pure? Yes! Does it strengthen the nerves? Yes! Is it entirely free from alcohol? Yes!

Ask your doctor if a family medicine, like Ayer's Sarsaparilla, is not vastly better without alcohol than with it.

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, fortifies the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

THE MAN-A-LIN TABLET.

An effective remedy for constipation, sour stomach, biliousness and many forms of indigestion, and is recommended for dyspepsia and sluggish bowels.

Ceresota Flour

sells most where many children are. The more the children, the greater the needed economy. Yet, Ceresota is not the cheapest flour.

Your most satisfactory answer is a small trial bag itself.
