"Fitzgeraldism is constructive"—which ought to be highly instructive to Boston.

"Nashuway! Nashuway! All elopin' complex get off here. Leave no reg' in the car, please."

It will cost a pretty penny to properly ventilate the State House at Montpelier, but the work ought to be done, nevertheless.

Company D, Vermont National Guard, of St. Johnsbury now has a handsome and commodious home. If the old company E of this city had been blessed with a satisfactory armory, it never would have gone down through lack of interest and then been disbanding, to be restored at Bellows Falls. Company D is to be congratulated on this earnest of its permanency, and the remaining militia companies of the state ought not to stop short of attaining as much. The state of Vermont should aid in this work, too.

REMOVAL OF PINCHOT.

In view of the prominence of both parties to the dispute and the taking of sides in the matter, the act of President Taft in removing Chief Forester Pinchot from office because of his attacks on Secretary Ballinger is calculated to stir up a great measure of hostility; and President Taft was courageous in causing the removal of a man who was a very capable official and who, up to the present time, has seemed to have the better of the argument with Secretary Ballinger. The dispute put President Taft in an extremely delicate position, to say the least, and he has taken hold of the matter forcefully and, apparently, unimpaired of the uproar which it will cause throughout the country. The dismissal, too, shows a widening of the relations between Taft and his immediate predecessor, who considered Pinchot in the most favorable light and gave him unstinted support in his policy of forest reservation. Ballinger, on the other hand, was particularly a protegee of Taft, and he owes his present prominence largely to Taft. But Secretary Ballinger, notwithstanding his patronage, has a long road to travel before he rehabilitates himself in the favor of the public.

THE "TIME-LOCK" ON THE VERMONT CONSTITUTION.

Inasmuch as the report of the governor's special commission to advance proposals of amendment to the Vermont constitution is now before the public, it will undergo close scrutiny between now and the assembling of the legislature which will be asked to adopt or reject the recommendations. That portion of the report which immediately commands attention, not only because of its primal position in the report, but because of its relative prominence in the list of matters considered, is the proposal to remove the restriction which commands that the constitution shall not be altered, except at a stated interval, which, in this case, is a decennium from the year 1880. In the popular expression of the day, this command is called the "time-lock" of the constitution, and very aptly so, too.

Such a restriction on the power to alter the constitution of the state was undoubtedly intended as a check to ill-considered proposals and to retain as much as possible the sacredness of the instrument by which we have our government. The intent, if such it be, was certainly commendable; but it is a question, if, by thus trying ourselves, we have not lost far more than we had thought to gain thereby. Long periods we have been obliged to suffer with hands fettered, when, under conditions which are said to obtain in every other state of the union, as well as in the case of the nation, we might have gained relief within two years under a reasonably conservative method of procedure. If the constitution should be amended at all, it is reasonable enough to permit the proposal of amendment to be made biennially, or as often as the legislature formally meets, provided, of course, the procedure is hedged about with other fair restrictions. Insofar as that is concerned, the Times is in accord with the first proposal of amendment presented by Governor Prouty's special commission.

However, the proposal to lower the bars to the extent of permitting amendments to slip through the legislature by a bare majority of votes of both branches, the Times believes to be too loose and not worthy of a place in the ually build up a winter-resort business that would be far reaching. The expense of developing these attractions would be comparatively small, and the pleasure would appeal not only to outsiders, but would stimulate a demand for healthful amusements, which would be advantageous to our home people. Nature has been good to us this year. We have had an abundance of snow and frosty nights sufficient to freeze any good-sized rink. We will be pardoned for suggesting another club for Waterbury, but just the same we believe that a Winter Resort club, if properly managed, would have merits that would be very satisfactory.—Waterbury Record.

Shawls and Capes of the Long Ago.

The Boston Journal discovered and photographed for yesterday's issue an old gentleman wearing a shawl above his overcoat, in the good old fashion of long ago in New England. The wonder is where the wearer secured his shawl. Perhaps he borrowed his wife's, or used one of the wraps that are employed by travelers in crossing the ocean. The warm woolen shawls that men used to wear 40 and more years ago, long ago disappeared. In many cases, they supplied the place of an overcoat. They were warm and convenient, because they could be readily shifted on the person to the point of greatest need. They used to be pinned around the neck with long sticks resembling the modern hat-pin of growing proportions, and they were deemed thoroughly manly affairs in the ancient days, though they would undoubtedly be dubbed a womanly garment by the young folks of this generation. But lovely woman, too, has discarded the shawl. Many a man who after became famous went through his college course with only a shawl for his extra winter protection. They were economical and sufficient in their day.

Now and then, also, there survives in old families a cape of the military type that used to be favorably regarded as a piece of masculine apparel. There is nothing more graceful than a long cape, which falls in naturally graceful folds. The modern man is permitted to have the ordinary overcoat, or his warmer fur coat, but the shawl and the cape have become well-nigh forgotten adjuncts. Some day a clever manipulator of fashions will reintroduce the cape, and men of taste will bless him for the act.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

JINGLES AND JESTS

A Modern Version. Simple Simon met a pizman, Going to the fair. Said Simple Simon to the pizman, "Let me taste your ware." "Young man, my ancestors were the hardy spirits who first blazed a trail through the pathless forest and founded the pioneer settlement in the region which is now Missouri. I myself hail from that glorious commonwealth, and before I can be induced to part with one of the ancient gods of pastry which I am vending, I must be shown your penny." Said Simple Simon to the pizman, "Indeed, I haven't any." —Lippincott's Magazine.

MONTEPELLIER.

Elks Will Have Club House on Barre street, Paying $6,000.

The Montpelier Lodge of Elks has purchased of Mrs. Kate Lowe her home on Barre street for a club house, paying $6,000 for it. This will give commodious quarters for the club, which has been looking out for just such an opportunity. The Elks have about 150 members. Later the property will be fixed up to suit their wants, but no alterations will be made at present.

The annual meeting of the board of trade will be held next Thursday evening, and at that time the committee which has had charge of the raising of the $30,000 industrial fund will report. Officers for the ensuing year will be elected and other business transacted.

The Montpelier Ice company has begun harvesting its crop, which is about 13 inches thick at the present time. About a quarter of the winter's supply has been cut thus far, and it will be necessary to cut at least twice, and possibly three times on part of the ice fields. It is planned to harvest about 7,000 tons of ice this season. It is better in quality than it was last winter.

Landon, Janet Landon and Miriam Landon.

Smith of Barre described the methods of getting level beds for the tracks on the great railroad lines in the western part of the country. The other paper discussed the methods of eliminating the smoke caused by the burning of soft coal in the cities.

The fifty-fifth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Telesphore Allard occurred yesterday. Mrs. Allard was formerly Miss Mary Jangraw, a native of this city and was born in 1830. Mr. Allard is a native of St. Francis, Can. and at the age of 14 years went to Green Bay, Wis., where he learned the blacksmith's trade. He came to Montpelier while he was still in his teens.
