Dreamland's distinctive feature picture to-night is "The Legion of Honor," a military drama. Scenes are in Germany at the time of the great French revolution. Napoleon Bonaparte figures prominently, and the battle scene, in which he takes part, is thrilling in the extreme. At the end he decimates a young detachment with the famous Legion of Honor cross. Very good is the entire program.

An educational-historical picture, the Bijou is featuring to-day, "Iona, the White Squaw," is a few western Indian drama based upon actual facts as history records. MAKING CHECKERS.

One Maine Mill Turns Out 1,200,000 Sets Each Year.

It seems inconceivable that two men can be kept steadily employed the year round making checkers. Yet that is what is done in a mill at Bethel, Me.

The average output of checkers from this mill is 800 barrels, says the Boston Globe. It has been as high as 1,000 and down to 600, but 800 is the average. This doesn't sound very large, but when these figures are worked out it is found to be a lot.

In every barrel shipped there are 30,000 checkers of the ordinary size, while in 800 barrels there are 24,000,000, or 1,200,000 sets of 21 checkers each--that is to say, with the output of this one Maine mill 2,400,000 persons could be playing checkers at the same time.

The checkers are made from white birch, and they are colored red and black. They are made by machinery. The workman who tends the machine takes a bolt, as the piece of birch is called, shoves one end into the machine and starts it. He wags the bolt back and forth, and each wag means a completed checker. So fast can he operate the machine that the eye cannot follow it sufficiently to count the checkers as they come out. The average rate of speed is 140 per minute.

It is an interesting fact that the machines which make these checkers are an invention of a member of the firm, and they are built in Bethel.

The output of the mill described is more than the combined output of all other mills making checkers in the United States.

The House of Lords.

If every peer were a politician, nothing to take part in public affairs and to convert his share in national legislation from a useful fiction into an ostentatious and insignificant fact, the house of lords would long ago have been found intolerable. But, as it is, most peers happily are sportsmen, landowners, magistrates, business men, and so on, before they are hereditary legislators, and Westminster claims, or at any rate receives, only a fraction of their time and interest. For the most part they simply abstain from going there. A considerable number of them do not even take the trouble to present the writs that entitle them to sit and vote. When 150 members are to be found in the house of lords at the same time it is proof that something of unusual importance is under discussion. Three are enough to form a quorum, and the ordinary routine business of the house occupies hardly an hour or so a day or engages the attention of more than two scores of members--Sydney Brooks to Atlantic.

Silton Cheese.

The secret of making Silton cheese was for some time confined to the family of the original inventors, who were under an engagement to sell all they could make to the famous Cooper Thornhill of Silton. Being thus to be obtained of him alone, it received the appellation of Silton cheese, but it would have been more appropriately named Wicheota cheese, being first made in that village, on the eastern side of Leicestershire, about thirty miles from Silton--London Standard.
