Boston banking institutions will next have to advertise that they have reliable help.

The state of Vermont was 119 years old yesterday, and she is growing younger every year.

We suspect the new editor of the Burlington Clipper is at least looking over the different "makes," for he produces five separate editorials dealing favorably with the automobiles.

In view of the spiteful attacks which the New York Sun used to make on Theodore Roosevelt, it would be very, very ironical to have the same Roosevelt become editor of that newspaper under new management. The late William Laffan would turn over in his grave if that should come to pass.

Washington's mild March 4, 1910, has somewhat silenced the demand for a later inauguration date. Roosevelt came into office in a storm, and Taft did the same. Roosevelt, it may be added, continued in a storm all through his office, and the indications are that Taft may if he "don't watch out."

STILL SEEKING THE NORTH POLE.

The search for the north pole has not been stopped by any means. It is being conducted now daily in the hearings of the congressional committee, which is being impudently reported favorably a bill granting substantial reward to Robert E. Peary. Nor will it stop until Peary's friends have submitted positive and conclusive proof that he performed the feat which he is now accredited with performing. This does not necessarily mean that the country doubts the validity of Peary's claim to have reached the northernmost point of the world; but it does represent a sound business policy that it is better to see what one is buying before paying the price. The Yankee persistence in demanding to be shown the deeds is commendable, and the efforts to secure reward for Peary deserve to be blocked until the proofs are made public. That Peary might lose financially by submitting the proofs to the public does not enter into the consideration at all, or should not. So, if Peary prefers to forego the reward of Congress in anticipation of the rewards to come from his lecturing on these proofs, then let his friends withdraw their efforts in his behalf before Congress.

THE LATEST LYNCHING CASE.

The brazen effrontery of the mob at Dallas, Texas, which this week lynched a negro accused of criminal assault, was perhaps the most remarkable that has been chronicled during several years. After boldly breaking their way into the courthouse through lines of deputy sheriffs and court officers, the infuriated mob hurled the accused negro out of a window and broke his neck; but, not satisfied with that, they dragged the body through the streets at the end of a rope and then strung it up for the gaze of ten thousand people, after which they loaded the human shell into a cart and presented it formally to the officers of the court, the grim work done. Did ever mob violence equal that demonstration? We read that a special grand jury will be called to investigate the outrage. Inasmuch as the mob worked without effort at concealment, the process of indictment ought to be very fruitful, provided the mob spirit does not possess the whole community, or, if not possess it, then cow it into complete submission. It is probable, however, that the city of Dallas is more or less in control of the inflamed minds of such people as led this blood-thirsty mob earlier in the week; and, therefore, the conviction of the participants will be somewhat difficult. Dallas is a city of some 20,000 population and should have had a police department and deputy sheriffs force capable of making a more formidable resistance to mob violence than was displayed in this mournful occurrence. But we fear that Dallas was more or less in sympathy with the purpose of the mob, or, at least, the opposition was merely passive.

A NEW MAN IN CONTROL OF THE PHOENIX.

In this week's Brattleboro Phoenix, O. L. French announces his valedictory; and beginning with the next issue this sterling newspaper will be published by Walter E. Hubbard under the name of The Vermont Phoenix company, he having acquired the ownership from Mr. French. Thus will retire from active journalism the man who is said to be the oldest in the profession in Vermont; and he has earned the reward which he so justly states in the following expression: "Perhaps I may rediscover some of the ideals of my boyhood. In any case, I mean to answer the call of the out-of-doors—especially as it comes from a certain orchard of young apple trees, and a slope of sugar maples, and a planting of young pines, and some dower borders, and outlooks across the hills and valleys on Ames hill." The entire newspaper fraternity in Vermont will wish for Mr. French that he may rediscover those boyhood ideals on Ames hill and elsewhere, and that he may be permitted to enjoy them for many years. His feeling of satisfaction that his newspaper property has passed into the hands of Walter E. Hubbard will be shared by all the latter's acquaintances. Schooled in the business and adapted to the policies of The Phoenix through twenty-five years' service under Mr. French and gradually assuming the directing of the newspaper property, Publisher Hubbard is just the man to take up the work where Mr. French has laid it down. He combines great editorial and managerial abilities and will certainly maintain The Phoenix with the leaders in Vermont journalism. Success to him!

Current Comment

Good Words of Mr. Seaver.

The recent announcement of the candidacy of Lewis M. Seaver of Williamstown for senator from Orange county has received a most hearty response throughout the county. This is not surprising, for as the representative from Williamstown in the last general assembly Mr. Seaver was one of its most valued members. He was not a House orator, but he had no difficulty in making himself clearly understood in a brief interval and his position was almost invariably sound and strong, carrying with it marked influence. Mr. Seaver's promotion to the Senate would mean for Orange county a decided influence in the shaping of legislation in that body. Williamstown is a growing and progressive town, second only in population on the west side of the county. It has been 12 years since the town has had a senator. While there is no desire on the part of this paper to tell the voters of Orange county what they ought or ought not to do, it would seem that for the best interest of the county, as well as in all fairness to the enterprising town of Williamstown, Mr. Seaver's nomination and election as one of its senators would be the part of wisdom.—Northfield News.

A. O. Cummings has been waging a war on rats at his home on College street and, after other methods failed, took a double-barreled shotgun to end the lives of a few. He had his eye on one and held the gun away from his shoulder, so that when the hammer came back, as the gun kicked, it struck him in the eye, tearing the skin on his nose and cutting the flesh above and below the eye. The sight was unimpaired. Two of the rats were killed measured ten inches in length.

One Resemblance, Anyhow. I never chopped a cherry tree, I never have possessed a quince; The honors that have come to us Have been but little ones and few; I never have achieved renown. Now I had an army anywhere; I never took a single town, But I have crossed the Delaware. I never wore a ruffled stock, My sleeves were never trimmed with lace; I never handed out a shock That shook old England to her base; I never have by word or deed, Reclaimed a people from despair; I never have been called to lead, But I have crossed the Delaware. —Chicago Record-Herald.

"Choice Word and Measured Phrase."

Find me the phrase whereby I might express My depth of feeling, neither more nor less. When things have dared to go awry with me And primal impulse prompted me to curse The Hees, myself and all the powers that be (A process doomed to make the evil worse), I have refrained and even come to see A means therein myself to reimburse By finding humor in catastrophe. Thus I have set myself in solemn verse To find a phrase whereby I might express My depth of feeling rather more than less. This has its limits; let me tell you them. And, first, note—I have a telephone. A very foolish thing to have. And, mem— I live in comfort, but I live alone. At five o'clock, at five o'clock A. M. When I was sleeping comfortably prone, It rang me up, and, though I used the "Don't." The "Doose," the "Hang," the "Well, I will be blown!" I failed, and failed by fathoms, to express My depth of feeling either more or less.

When it had rung its fifty-seventh ring.

That was, I knew, a summons to obey Or listen to an endless summoning. I rose in anger, after much delay. "Are you a policeman?" said the silly thing. I said, "I am a bard," and came away. A frosty morn' at five! Oh, readers, bring Your intellects to bear. What could I say? Find me the phrase whereby I might express My depth of feeling, neither more nor less. —Punch.

NOVEL PETITION.

Center Street Merchants in Rutland Don't Want Saloons.

Rutland, March 5.—A petition asking the board of license commissioners, yet to be appointed, not to give any person the right to sell liquor on Center street, under a first-class privilege, was placed in circulation yesterday, being favored by a large number of the merchants. It will be presented to the board when the members have been appointed by the assistant judges of the county court.

The merchants advance the claim that when the open saloons were allowed on Center street, business fell off 45 per cent to 50 per cent. They explain that many persons, especially women, do not care to enter the stores when they have to pass through crowds of men in different stages of intoxication.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

"The Man of the Hour" Four Years Old and Still Popular.

It is always difficult to judge the life of a play, and many of the most talked of successes rarely survive a second season. When George Broadhurst's great play, "The Man of the Hour," which will be seen at the opera house next Tuesday evening, was first produced four years ago, its most ardent admirers could not have foretold its lasting popularity. The play is imbued with that wistful pathos which so strongly haunts the lives of men and women and is no less present in their joy than in their sorrow. Amid the tears of laughter, one hears the old heart-break and woman's sob, and woman's self-sacrifice, and in this the play is true to life as it has been lived upon the earth since the world began. Every one who has seen this play feels in his innermost heart that along with its sterling characters, its rollicking fun and its touching love story, "The Man of the Hour" has in it a spirit and a faith to soften and soothe the souls of men and to bring pity and laughter back to hearts bowed down. Managers Wm. A. Brady and Jas. R. Gismar's special company of players will enact the parts; it includes Thomas Chatterton, John Kelly, Alexander Carlton, Harry Mills, P. J. Hollow, R. E. Clark, Helen Avery, Doris Harby and others.

Klark-Urban Co.

The popular price patrons of the Barre opera house are general of some thing in the highest order of merit in the amusement line when the Klark-Urban company appears here next week. The company is headed by Miss Klark and the supporting company is unusually clever. The list of plays which will be presented are all royalty productions and have been prepared and staged for big city work, having secured the same elaborate scenery and costumes used in the original productions. The press reports state that the work is done as well or better than the original productions when they were seen at dollar prices. The opening bill will be the great comedy drama "At Piney Ridge," with "The Belle of Richmond," "Way Out West," and "The White Caps," to follow.

The following vaudeville features will be introduced between the acts, making a continuous performance. Miss Maizie Cornell, songs and dances, Frank Clayton, comedian, vocalist and musician, A. E. Tenney, comedy juggler, Clark and Hanson, comedy sketches and Schreiber, Brothers and Klark and Urban, the four monarchs of music. Seats on sale at Kendrick's, 7 p. m. Wednesday. Ladies tickets 10 cents, Wednesday evening. Limited to 200, if bought at advance sale before 6 p. m. Wednesday.
