Let Speaker Cannon walk. He will be in better humor when he reaches the speaker's chair.

Taft waves the olive branch, whereas Roosevelt brandished the big stick. That sums up the difference.

Congratulations to Library Commissioner Joseph Auld of Burlington; it isn't collector of customs, but it's something.

"These beautiful spring days remind us of midsummer," said an exchange last week. And now look at the darned thing!

President Taft's best defense would be the absolute discharge of Secretary Ballinger; it would go further than all the talking that he and Wickersham could do for months.

In a collision between an aeroplane and an automobile at Memphis, the aeroplane came out second best. The auto is still supreme on land, however much the aeroplane may rule the air.

It would be still better if the Pullman company was compelled to rip out the upper berths entirely and thus give occupants of the lower berths a chance to move without spraining the spinal column.

Those 750 pounds of Vermont maple sugar which Senator Page expects to distribute among his colleagues will sweeten the adversity which the junior Vermont senator has been up against since he has been in the Senate.

So long as Eugene Foss was content to be merely the tail to the kite, James H. Vahey patted him; but now that Foss threatens to become the whole kite, why Vahey stamps his foot with rage. Foss was all right in his place, that is, the place where Vahey wanted him.

Various Vermont newspapers are urging their communities to muster their strongest army when the enumerators begin their work next Friday. Even driftnets of ones, twos and threes count in Vermont, where there is constant danger of going backward in population. So let no one escape.

With the Harvard football coach paid five thousand dollars a year, the professors in that ancient seat of learning may be pardoned a little snippishness. The football instructor gets more for teaching a few brawny athletes how to "chew up" their opponents in a single season than the hard-working mentors in the classroom get for showing the same number of students how to spend the remainder of their lives.

WILL PROVE COMMISSION'S VALUE. That the value of Senator Dillingham's work as chairman of the national immigration commission is being recognized more and more is indicated by the following from the Boston Transcript:—

"A half century ago this tide from the other side meant to a large extent to us what it now means to Canada, the occupation and the development of the land. Individual helpers, for house or farm, were easily obtained, where as now they seek to be employed in colonies or 'gangs' and this largely explains the extent to which they increase the congestion in cities. The extent of the anchorage obtained by many alien elements which we would sooner not have, were it a matter of choice, makes effective restriction now doubly difficult. As the result of this investigation, however, there will be strong pressure for increased restriction, and it is likely to become a question of great interest to the country when Congress reaches it."

The increased demand for restriction of immigration to the extent of keeping out the criminal classes, paupers, insane, etc., is bound to bring the commission's work into prominence and will probably prove the wisdom of continuing the commission in its duties for some time, or until the results of the investigation shall have been fully compiled.

BETTER TO LEAVE IT ALONE.

We hope that the Vermont Methodist conference, which convenes at Island Pond to-day, will refuse to adopt any resolutions on the Vatican-Roosevelt incident, such as were adopted by some Methodist conferences which happened to be in session just at the time when the incident had reached its highest stage of popular attention. Then the disputants on both sides were wrought up to a considerable extent, and they perhaps said things which in the more quiet moments they would not have considered at all. Now that the event is contemplated in the calm after-thought, its importance is minimized, and it is looked upon more as Roosevelt suggested it should be observed, as purely a personal matter and, furthermore, not so tremendously far-reaching as it seemed to be at the time the information was first given to the public. Continued open warfare between two great churches is not would be all that is necessary to protect deer. The case of dogs and sheep is an entirely different matter. If the farmers prefer dogs to sheep they have the privilege and the power for they generally have a clear majority in the Vermont legislature.—Bennington Banner.

The Annual Changes.
She looked at the ceiling, she looked at the walls,
She looked at the stairways, she looked at the halls,
And then decided that they wouldn't do.

That each must be tinted in some other hue,
She changed all the windows, she changed all the doors,
She had men refinish the woodwork and floors;

The furniture, too, she concluded was old, to the second-hand dealer was sold.
New furniture came; the piano, as well,
Was changed for another she thought was more swell.

The heating arrangements—she had them ripped out,
And brand new contraptions of pipes laid about.

The bedding, the curtains, the carpets and rugs,
She quickly condemned with dissatisfied shrugs,
She vowed that not one of the lot was the thing,
And ordered an outfit all new for the spring.

She changed the veranda, she shifted the roof—
And now her poor husband from her holds aloof,
For grimly he fears she will thus seal his fate;
"You'll have to be changed; you are clear out of date!"—Chicago Evening Post.

Was obliged to send one lot back. It wasn't good enough. But the old saying has again proved true—"A patient waiter is no loser"—and we have just opened this morning a handsome line of
