FORMER MINISTER IN HER OLD PULPIT

Rev. Edie K. M. Jones Given Fine Tribute Yesterday, When Large Crowd Attended Service.

A splendid tribute to the widespread popularity and close friendships which Rev. Edie K. M. Jones of Waterlo, Ia., acquired in Barre during her ten years' pastorate here, was the immense crowd of people that gathered at the Universalist church Sunday morning, where she again occupied the pulpit for the first time since she left here six and a half years ago. Despite the heat, which was almost suffocating in its intensity, the friends and former parishioners of Mrs. Jones flocked to the church in such numbers that every seat was filled and chairs had to be provided for many of those who were late to come in. Not only did her audience comprise a large number of her former parishioners, but people were present from every church in the city.

This significant greeting could not fail to have its effect upon the speaker, and just before the close of the service she said that she had waited until this time for fear of losing control of her feelings, before she attempted, in any way, to express something of her great joy at once more having the opportunity to look into the faces of so many people dear to her. And, mingled with her joy, she said, there was a feeling of sadness as she thought of other familiar faces which were now missing from the congregation and were always to be missed. She asked that she be granted the privilege of taking each one of the audience by the hand as they passed out of the door, and after the benediction the large audience nearly to a person remained standing in their seats until she had come down from the altar and reached the door before they passed out.

That she has lost none of her personal charm and marked ability to reach the hearts of her hearers was the sentiment of everyone present after they had listened with wrapt attention for fifty minutes to her powerful sermon. Mrs. Jones took for her text Galatians 5:14, "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

She said in part: Every age has its own particular history and emphasis. We are reminded that times of beauty seldom come without a corresponding time of sorrow. It is the duty of every generation to be true to its own age and then with another. In one age we emphasize one aspect of truth in one way and in another age in quite another way. What I wish to bring forcibly before you today is that religion, the soul's thirst for God, is not a thing of the past. It is a thing that is still to be lived in different ways at different times.

To-day is the age of social religion, which, I think, is the very core of religion. We have such personal expressions of religion as the Lenten season, which is a personal religion and used to be first in importance; to-day social religion is coming to the front. It does not mean to say that man are minimizing their personal religion, for we know that no man can do his duty or please his God without personal righteousness. We have also learned that a man must not only be right toward himself and his God, but he must be right toward his fellowmen. Every man should learn how to move shoulder to shoulder with his fellowmen and at the same time attend to his own personal righteousness.

We have that in us which is familiarly called conscience, which helps us to keep in the straight and narrow way. This has been known for ages and ages but it has been left for this age to learn that we must be possessed and actuated by a social conscience that gives a man no peace until he has done his duty by his fellowmen.

It is thought that it was sufficient to make a Christian of a man in time so that when the great catastrophe came he would be safe for heaven. But now we have come to the social aspect of the religion of Jesus Christ. We have seen truth small, not because truth is small, but because our sight is narrow and we cannot conceive of the great breadth and depth it has. Men and women are to be holy in order that their holiness might make others holy. He who experienced religion for himself has only just begun to be a Christian. The Christian life must give answer to the phrase, "By their fruits ye shall know them." So it is not simply getting ready for the end; we must bring into the social problems of the world our Christian lives.

What one is in one relation he must be in every relation before he can take his place as a truly Christian man. Dr. Horton has truly said that the disease of society to-day is the lovelessness of men and women. Why is it that a man becomes a defaulter or uses his office as public trust for his own pecuniary ends? It is because he loves his fellowmen more and himself less, or that he loves himself more and his fellowmen less! The great problem of society to-day is to press us can only be solved by the brotherhood of man. The Lord has said that all the law is simply that "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Let us, then, believe that love is the fulfillment of the law.

From my experience in charitable work, I have learned that the poor need not shun us as much as they need prayer. They need someone whose heart beats in sympathy with them. All the needs of charity in this world would be met and answered if every family that is in comfortable circumstances would pick out some unfortunate family and make that family's happiness its business. This is a practical and personal way of working out our social religion. I believe that the restoration of the world will not be by another incarnation of God but by the indwelling of the spirit of God in your heart and mine. We are told that the spirit of God is in us, and just in proportion as we learn how to go about doing good like our Master, in just such proportion will the kingdom of God be spread on this earth.

The Daylight Store

An Outside View.

The Vermont Republicans appear to have had rather a breezy time at their state convention. Their nominee for governor, John A. Mead, had but three more votes than were necessary to a choice, and the struggle for the nomination which began practically a year ago, was fought up to the ballot box. Mr. Wood received 52 and Mr. Betts 48.

Really the Vermont Republicans have been aroused and have broken away from that apathetic acquiescence in the machine's dictations which once rendered their conventions simply gatherings for the purpose of registration. Mr. Mead may not have quite so easy a campaign as most Republican candidates have had, but his opponent will probably be sufficient to jolt the usual moral of Vermont's Republicanism.

The platform also indicates the stirring of a broader spirit in the Republican party in the state. It favors reciprocity with Canada, which so many of the old-time leaders long discountenanced if they did not openly antagonize. Now that President Taft has succeeded in arranging a modus vivendi with the Dominion to prevent the application of the maximum clause, party loyalty coincides with the inclination of liberal Vermonters. The convention heartily endorsed the Taft administration, giving notable prominence to the "tariff board" idea.

In one respect the committee on resolutions departed from the printed platform which had been circulated in advance "for remarks." It cut out the resolution favoring the creation of a government department of public health. Such a volume of opposition was expressed by the followers of the various medical sects, including the homeopaths, that the committee, after a hearing that lasted ten hours, decided to evade the issue altogether. The worldly wisdom of the politician which teaches him to

Dr. Mead's Nomination.

Within the privacy of his own walls to-day, when Dr. John Abner Mead commences with himself, rubs his hands and smiles with satisfaction at the prospect of an ambition soon to be gratified, he may whisper softly, "Persistence wins." Defeated six years ago, when he ran for the lieutenant-governorship, Mead, then past 60 years of age, appeared to be eligible for the down and out political club. Two years ago, however, he came back again by a coalition with Mr. Frouty, who was giving a hard fight for the governorship, he secured second place on the ticket by a narrow margin from a comparatively unknown candidate, who had not made an aggressive canvass. This year "things broke right" for Mead. Merrill and Gates, both widely known men who would have been strongly supported, refused to be candidates. For many months, only one contender appeared against the lieutenant-governor who sought promotion. Then came the belated attempt to draft a third candidate, but the new-comer received little support, except from the two southern edgites.

Employing the old-time schemes, with hired retainers to work the political game for him, in a close finish Mead has won the nomination, which is equivalent to an election. With a record as one of the most successful business men the state has produced, Mead will undoubtedly give Vermont a good business administration.

Our objection all along has not been so much on the question of Mead's ability as on his political methods and his refusal to make public his campaign expenses. The energies of the opposition to Dr. Mead in this campaign have not been wholly wasted, wholly vain. The people have been aroused, if pretest against the old order of affairs, and although Mead has pulled through we shall see in his scant victory the passing of methods of political procedure which have lost their effectiveness for the reason that the people are disgusted with them.—Brattleboro Phoenix.

There is a Big Difference in Tea and Coffee!

Some Coffee grown in Mexico, some in Porto Rico and great deal more in Brazil.

It doesn't make so much difference where it's grown as how it's cultivated and what kind of Coffee it makes.

The same with Tea. It doesn't have to be grown in China or Japan if the quality is there.

For example try our Fomosa Oolong Tea, grown on the island of Fomosa in the China Sea. Experts say it flavors best. We make a specialty of Coffee and Tea quality and our prices will compare with any. If not we would like to know it. Try some today and tell us if it doesn't please you.
