About thirty Masons from this city attended the district meeting in North Montpelier last evening, making the trip in a barge from Ewen & Gow's stable.
J. W. Roberts of South Barre, one of the leading poultry raisers in this vicinity, has 43 White Wyandotte hens, whose laying record for the months of December and January is remarkably good, considering that those months are the two hardest in the year for the egg business. The total number of eggs of the two months was 1,239, with January 27 the largest single day, when thirty eggs were laid. It ought to be stated, too, that eight of the hens were out of the pens for a week during the recent poultry show, thus cutting down the total lay somewhat.
