Something New—Counting Fishes.

To count the salmon in Alaskan rivers would seem to be a task not merely stupendous but impossible. Yet it is being accomplished in a very systematic way by the government fisheries bureau, and for a purpose of utmost practical importance to the future of the commercial salmon fishery in that part of the world.

So far in this time, indeed, that the cost of taking the salmon census is being defrayed, up to date, by two of the biggest canning companies—the fisheries bureau having no funds to meet the expense involved, which amounts to about $5,000 a year. This, however, it should be understood, covers the cost only of counting of salmon in one large river, which was picked out for an initial experiment.

The stream in question is the Wood river which, for the purpose of census taking, was closed for the time being to the commercial fishery. There was no trouble about arranging this, because the fisheries bureau, under authority bestowed upon it by Congress, has absolute control over all the salmon streams of Alaska. It tells the canning concerns where and when they may catch fish, and when and where they will not be allowed to catch them. If it chose, it could suspend the salmon fishery altogether for an indefinite period in Uncle Sam's arctic province.

What it wants to do, however, is to keep the fishery going, and to make sure that the supply of salmon shall be maintained. Hence the undertaking here described, which, as will presently be seen, has a direct bearing upon the commercial problem. Thus, for example, now that it has been ascertained how many salmon run up Wood river to spawn, the experts are able to judge with accuracy of the number of fish required to maintain the supply in that particular stream.—From "Census of the Salmon," in April Technical World Magazine.

Wireless Service in Alaska.

The United States has brought south-eastern Alaska, the valley of the Yukon and the region of the Behring straits into instant communication with the entire civilized world. General Adolphus W. Greeley, formerly chief signal officer of the army, not long ago said, "There yet lacks to complete the dream of a half century ago of telegraphically uniting America and Asia via Behring strait, a cable to the Asiatic shore and a Russian line of about 1,500 miles to Nikolaevsk." The dream may find realization much more quickly than any man not charged with the electric enthusiasm can believe.

The main Alaska cable and land lines laid and strung by the men of the signal corps run under the sea and through the air from Seattle in the state of Washington, to St. Michael, from St. Michael across Norton sound to Nome the communication is by wireless. This is the route; Cable; Seattle to Sitka, Sitka to Valdez, 1,684 miles, Main land lines from Valdez to Fairbanks, to Fort Gibbon, to St. Michael, 1,068 miles. There are branch cables from Sitka to Juneau and to Skagway, and from Valdez to Fort Livium, Seward and Cape Whittaker.

Branch land lines run from Gulkana to Eagle City, which is on the boundary line between the British and the American Alaskan possessions.

Within a few weeks a wireless station has been put into commission at Kotlik at the mouth of the Yukon river. The new station is eighty miles

VERMONTERS CELEBRATED.

Those in Manchester, N. H., Held Celebration Tuesday Evening.

Manchester, N. H., March 23.—Vermonters of Manchester assembled at the Joliet clubhouse Tuesday evening, in celebration of the anniversary of Vermont's adoption of her name and petition to be admitted to the sisterhood of states in 1777.

There were literary exercises and a banquet. The president, Curtis W. Davis, trustee officer of the city, presided and directed the program. Following the banquet Miss Blanche Van Coultter gave a number of readings, and addresses were made by William A. Burgess, Avilham M. Holman and Norris D. Blake.

The association was deeply disappointed by the receipt of a telegram from Hon. Charles K. Darling, clerk of the United States court of appeals in Boston, a native of Vermont, who had accepted an invitation to be present, but who was obliged to cancel his acceptance because of an imperative call to proceed to Pennsylvania.

A Village Tale.

Miss Elviro Eunice Parker, Single lady—by desire—Years ago was quite determined What she'd do in case of fire. Thus she reasoned: "I would dress me, Wholly without perturbation, Gather up my chief belongings, See to Tabitha's salvation, From its hook take down the parrot, Cheery partner of my labors, Then I'd raise my chamber window, And alarm the sleeping neighbors."

Well, one night a fire started As Miss Parker slept. The smoke her Chamber filled, and presently the Suffocating smell awoke her. Did she do as she had reasoned? No; she quite forgot her scheming, And with shrieking she roused the neighbors.

From the sweetest of their dreaming, They awoke vases from the window; Tabitha her own salvation Had to seek out, while the parrot, Used a word that ends with -ation. When the neighbors came they found a White-robed figure wildly screaming, All the fire was soon extinguished, But she kept on loudly calling: "Fire! Fire! Fire! Fire!"

In a manner most appalling, And the neighbors, having stopped her, When they finally departed Left Miss Parker—single lady— In the ruins—broken hearted, —Somerville Journal.

WATER POWER BILL PASSED

With Vermont and Certain Companies Exempt.

Concord, N. H., March 23.—In the House of Representatives yesterday, the first bill, introduced by Upton of Bow, was to forbid the transmission of electricity generated by water power beyond the confines of the state. A majority of the judiciary committee reported that the bill ought to pass, and there was a minority report that it ought not to pass. Twenty speakers were heard, and the bill finally passed. It exempts railroads and also the state of Vermont so far as the Connecticut river is concerned. It also allows such corporations as are now under contract to transmit power without the state to continue.
