Christmas Trading at Home

Buying By Mail

You want to buy goods where you can get the best price. That's good sense and good business.

Now CAN you save money by buying a mail order house?

The big argument of the mail order house is the saving of the "middle man's profit."

Here's what they save. They get your money before they act. They get rid of paying the freight (you pay that). They save delivering the goods to your house (you attend to that.) They have no expense in uncrating furniture, twining up chair legs, polishing bruises that occur in transit or making good any complaints that may arise after the furniture has been in use a few weeks. (You look out for all that yourself.)

On the same basis, quality for quality, we can match the price of any mail order house in America. Try us next time. Give us a fair test and see how much money you save.

You would be foolish to pay more for goods simply to get them here, but if we can save you money, get the goods to you without delay or inconvenience, and look out for any little adjustments afterward—you ought to consider us before sending your money away.

The pastors of the churches, both Catholic and Protestant, have arranged for a lecture by J. N. Bars, superintendent of the state industrial school at Vergennes, for next Tuesday night, Dec. 5 at 8 o'clock at the opera house. Subject of lecture, "In the Larger, Better and Bigger Vermont is There to be a Place for the Manufacture of Criminals?" This meeting is arranged for men only and all men interested in civic and moral righteousness are urged to plan to be present. There will be no charge. Mr. Bars is a most excellent speaker, and probably no man in the state can speak with larger first hand knowledge of the subject than he. Remember, Tuesday night, Dec. 5, opera house.

"Italian Blood." One doesn't need to be told that the workman's wife in this picture is Italian, or at least of southern blood; nor that her husband is Irish, that is, not while he remembers that he is Irish. The man loves her, but because he doesn't show it as an Italian would, she feels that he is cold. An Irishman likes to light his own pipe, while an Italian likes to have his wife hold the match. The wife tries to awaken her husband's love through jealousy and very nearly brings about a tragedy. The man overhears a conversation just in time and understands. The picture gets a pretty firm grip on a very human situation, and is well designed. It's a picture worth seeing. It's a Dreamland.

An excellent show was witnessed by those who attended the Pavilion yesterday. All of the pictures and both acts of vaudeville were exceptionally good and the audiences at every show seemed to enjoy the program to its utmost. The act presented by Lawlor has a very novel opening, an opening that gives an audience an entirely unexpected surprise. To tell what it is would spoil the act for those who have not seen it, therefore we will not spoil it by advertising in advance what it is. The act is very neat and pleasing and scored heavily at every show yesterday. Wood and Shepard present what is undoubtedly the funniest black face act ever seen in the city. Their musical numbers are excellent and the comedy situations kept the audience in constant roars of laughter. An entire new program of pictures comes to-day, one of which is an extra added feature, entitled, "The Battle Trafalgar," a spectacular picture showing Lord Nelson's defeat of the combined fleets of France and Spain.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to the kind friends and neighbors for the many acts of kindness shown us during the sickness and death of our loved one, also for the beautiful flowers.

TALK OF THE TOWN

Remember the Christmas sale, under the auspices of the woman's guild of the Church of the Good Shepherd at Howland hall, Wednesday and Thursday evenings of next week. Admission to sale and operetta, 10c.

I heard one of the committee of the apron sale say that they had about fifty aprons to dispose of at Howland hall Wednesday and Thursday evenings of next week. So come early and avoid the rush, also get a good seat for the operetta.

Politics and the Steel Inquiry.

The administration's suit for the dissolution of the steel trust is proving to be quite up to expectations as an embarrassment to the Stanley committee of the Democratic House of Representatives. Congressman Littleton, who represents the Oyster Bay district, if memory is not at fault, disagrees with his Democratic brother, Chairman Stanley, concerning the power of the committee to proceed with the investigation. As he points out, with lawyer-like precision, the committee was authorized to learn whether the steel corporation does business in violation of the anti-trust law, and since then the government has brought action against the concern under the provisions of that same law. Why should the committee continue its inquiry, asks Mr. Littleton. Furthermore, has it any right to continue?

The House must decide these questions until it does, the investigation is suspended. If political considerations were to be eliminated, Chairman Stanley would himself admit that his legitimate work is ended and that the case now belongs to the department of justice alone. The steel trust officials, being defendants in a suit for the dissolution of their company, are entitled to some protection against an inquisition which might be prejudicial to their interests in the legal proceedings. The counsel for the trust only demanded a kind of protection that is ordinarily accorded to the meekest law-breaker under indictment or arrest, in his protest against the political harassment of the corporation by a committee of Congress while it is fighting for life in the courts.

Chairman Stanley's indignation against Congressman Littleton reveals the extent to which the steel trust has become a political football. One is reminded, too, of the low deal to the Democrats by President Taft in ordering that the trust be prosecuted. He stole their thunder. The Democratic House may yet sustain Mr. Stanley and authorize the renewal of the congressional inquiry, notwithstanding the government's action, in order that the people may have the benefit of all possible information concerning a certain celebrated episode, about which the president and the ex-president are disagreed, before the presidential election. But the House's motive will be partisan and tinged not a little with the desire to widen the cleavage between Mr. Taft and his distinguished predecessor.—Springfield Republican.

The New Arithmetic.

My income is thirty-three hundred, and this is the way it is spent: Twelve hundred for eating and drinking and treating. And nearly nine hundred for rent; For dressing, twelve hundred suffices, although that's a little bit small, while servants' high portions and doctors' extortions make up, say, a thousand in all.

We must go away in the summer, and that costs eighteen hundred, let's say. Five hundred will measure the money for pleasure, including the opera and play. And then there's—but just stop a moment Before I allow for my pets; I've cited quite clearly six thousand, or nearly— Well, most of it's paid for—in debts! —Puck.

Hunting With the Camera.

Thanks to modern science a man can enjoy all the delights of hunting nowadays without wetting his hands with blood. Equipped with a camera, a good lens and various helpful devices, in which he takes the same pride as a hunter does in his modern rifle, he can bring home magnificent trophies for the walls of his den without doing butcher's work to secure head or pelt. He can engage in a war of wits with the wild creatures, making a little longer odds no doubt, for it is far easier to get within shooting distance of game than it is to get within a camera range, and as for the danger, the man who goes after lions or other ferocious beasts with a camera surely requires as much nerve as the other man who takes an arsenal along and murders the unsuspecting brutes at long range. The hunt for dangerous animals need not be discussed, however, as the average man has no chance to indulge in that variety of sport. Few of us can afford the outlay of time and money required to reach the haunts of the jungle beasts, but all of us are near enough to some bit of woods or field to go camera hunting most any day.

That is one of the beauties of this coming sport, that all game is fair game for the camera. There is no close season for the man with the little black box and no limit to his bag. He requires no hunter's license, no membership in an expensive gun club and ordinarily no guide. In fact the amateur has a good chance to perfect himself in the sport without going very far afield and this practice, by the way, is an essential. Camera hunting must be learned just the same as hunting with shotgun or rifle. The beginner at the sport must learn how to judge distance ever more accurately than the marksman. He must study the problems of light and speed if he is to catch his game on the wing or running. He must learn to think quickly and act promptly in focusing and regulating the stop, and he will find camera target practice at the less shy and difficult subjects near home quite as fascinating as popping away at tin cans or clay pigeons with firearms.

Moreover he must study the ways of wild things quite as carefully as the man who means to kill them, and, approaching them with no murderous intent, he is more likely to learn intimately of their habits than the sportsman who is planning to destroy them.

One of the most fascinating of camera sports is a night hunt from a canoe. The problem is to ascertain by the tracks and other signs where game is in the habit of coming to the water's edge to drink. There, after dark, the approach is made to that spot very stealthily, without noise and, of course, with no light in the canoe. The hunter can be guided only by sounds, and must judge his distance by the slight noises made by the game, and when he believes himself within range and has the camera pointed, the flash is exploded and the whole water's edge with its background of forest is suddenly illuminated.

A good negative of such a scene with deer or moose starting at the flash makes an enlargement which is as beautiful a thing to hang upon the library wall as the branching antlers of the game itself and is quite as convincing a trophy of the owner's skill.—From "Camera vs. Rifle," in December Technical World Magazine.
