MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE. The Regular Enrollment is 3,653 and 103 in Summer Session. Middlebury, Dec. 29.—Middlebury's catalogue for 1911-12 appeared this week and is by far the most attractive announcement ever put out by the college. The effect of recent gains in income is shown in the larger faculty and many new subjects of study. There are now 29 instructors, including nine full professors. Four years ago the faculty numbered only 12. This catalogue announces 186 courses, as against 157 for 1910-11. If a student were to take every course offered to him, it would take him over 16 years to get through college.

The courses in mechanical drawing, descriptive geometry, and surveying and plotting have been listed in a new department of engineering, with new courses in applied mechanics and municipal engineering. The latter subject includes a study of the materials of engineering, highway construction, water systems, sewage disposal, and sanitary science and public health. It is not designed to confer degrees in engineering, but to prepare students to enter the junior year of a school of technology of the first grade, thus combining the college and technical course in six years and securing the advantages of both.

With the idea of increasing interest in the cultural subjects by making them lead up to their practical applications, applied courses are offered. In biology these are agriculture, a general introduction to the subject with special reference to those who may be required to teach agriculture in high schools, practical and commercial botany, economic entomology, and forestry. In both pomology and forestry practical experiments are carried on.

For women, beside the work in physical education required of freshmen and sophomores, there are courses in the function of the family and the relation of the arts to social life, which are taught by Miss Crawford, dean of women, and also a two-year course in home economics. The department of pedagogy now offers 12 courses by two professors and the intending teacher now begins his training in freshman year. American history is thoroughly treated, the courses extending over three years. There are new advanced courses in zoology, geology, chemistry, mathematics, modern languages, and economics. The total attendance is 468. This includes the summer session, the number of undergraduates being 305, a gain of 158 over last year. The men number 158 and the women 147. There are 154 undergraduate students from Vermont, practically 50 per cent. Every state in New England is represented. The numbers from states other than Vermont are as follows: Massachusetts 20, New York 38, New Hampshire 22, Connecticut 22, New Jersey 11, Rhode Island and Maine 2 each, and Ohio and Tennessee 1 each. The foreign countries represented are China, Japan and Portugal.

A CONDUCTOR'S STORY By BISSELL T. RAND Copyright by American Press Association, 1911. We railroad conductors have to stand a great deal of abuse, to which we are expected to give a courteous reply. I make it a rule when a passenger takes me to task for something that occurs in the line of my duty not to stop for a talk, but to push on to another part of the train. In this way I avoid an unpleasant discussion, probably having to listen to a catalogue of the railroad management's sins against the public and being tortured into breaking the rules by using severe words. The most disagreeable duty of a conductor is putting persons off the train who either cannot or will not pay their fare. We must be careful to keep within the law, and we can't always be certain about it. The company don't wish to be sued for damages in such cases, and where they are it prefers that the law be on their side. I was going through my train one day when a seedy looking man handed me a ticket on another road. I refused to take it, of course. Whereupon he said that it had been sold to him for a ticket on my road and I had got to take it. I insisted that if he didn't pay his fare I would put him off, whereupon he paid to a station called Arlington, saying that was all I would get for the whole distance. I replied that he could ride to Arlington, and if he didn't pay further he would be put off at Harkerville two miles beyond Arlington. The man was evidently playing some game. I disliked interfering with him for fear he was intending to get put off that he might serve some purpose by doing so. The fellow looked too respectable for his clothes. However, the rules were imperative, and when he refused to pay at Arlington I determined to put him off at Harkerville. When the train stopped I put my arms under his and lifting him out of his seat hustled him to the door of the car. I got him through, but when I endeavored to dislodge him from the platform he put up an effective resistance. Getting his grip on the guard rail, he hung on till a crowd, attracted by the noise, collected, and my man, though struggling, found breath to curse the railroad, its management and all its employees. Finally I pushed him off and signaled the engineer to pull ahead. I left the man shaking his fist at me and vowing vengeance. Looking back from a distance, I saw him haranguing those who had witnessed his ejection. The matter troubled me. I expected that he had some right to ride that I knew not of—that he would sue the company and I would be discharged for not having passed him. Ordinarily, this would not have troubled me, but in this case the man, though shabbily dressed, did not look like a tramp or a man accustomed to force himself as a deadhead. There had been an attempt to wreck one of the trains on the road which had nearly succeeded. The train referred to carried a large sum of money for an express company, and it was supposed that it was to rob this car that the attempt had been made. Running a local train myself, I did not take much interest in the matter, for my train was not liable to be wrecked for purposes of robbery. One morning I was told that the gang who had attempted to wreck the train had been tracked by detectives employed by the company, and an arrest had been made. But where they had been captured I did not hear. I was just starting out on my daily trip and had no time to indulge my curiosity by making inquiries about the matter. When I reached Arlington I was handed a telegram from the superintendent to stop my train just across a bridge about a mile before I reached Harkerville and take on a party that would be waiting there for me. I made the stop as ordered and found several plain clothes police officers, armed with rifles as well as revolvers, guarding a number of handcuffed prisoners. The officers put their captives aboard the train, and after starting I went into the car where they were to collect their fares. One of the officers, clapping a hand on my shoulder, said: "See here, conductor, a few weeks ago you put me off this train for not paying my fare. I was obliged to submit, but now I propose to carry this whole gang through without tickets or money. We're quite prepared for anything that may happen." The man spoke haughtily. I looked at his face and it seemed familiar. Then it dawned upon me that he was the seedy passenger with whom I had had the scuffle. "Don't you remember me?" he asked, smiling. "I think I do." "You should. You helped me get in with these gentlemen with bracelets on their wrists. They are the men who tried to wreck the express some time ago. They were tracked to Harkerville, and the company sent me there to gain their confidence. I saw no better way for an introduction than to get put off the train. I stayed awhile in Harkerville, cursing you and the road, until one of these men was emboldened to propose to me another attempt at wrecking. He had had a pass in his pocket at the time I put him off, and had another now for himself and party. But I didn't ask to see it. ABOUT THE STATE Happenings of Interest From Different Sections. Mr. and Mrs. Bert Underwood of Bradford celebrated on Christmas day their 55th wedding anniversary. They were married in Jamestown, Rock county, Wis. George Schmitt is at home in Rutland after giving aeroplane flights in the West Indies. Two years ago he built himself a glider that was partially successful, and then he went to Mineola, N. Y., to do further experimenting. After fully learning the art, he was engaged to give exhibitions throughout the continent. Fred Foster of Rutland is minus $12 as the result of Christmas kindness exhibited toward a man by the name of La Mountain or La Fountain, who went into the Bardwell stable and asked permission to spend the night in the hay loft. But Foster let him share his couch and in the morning his cash and bedfellow were missing. A charming and thoughtful old English custom, long practiced in the old country, was instituted at St. Albans Christmas eve when a party of young ladies and gentlemen, all good singers, made the rounds of the hospitals and homes of the sick and serenaded them with Christmas carols. The singing was a rare treat to the shut-ins and was greatly appreciated by them. Thursday was the 100th birthday anniversary of Mrs. Haggood of Peru, mother of M. J. Haggood. She was born in Peru, the daughter of Benjamin Barnard. At fifteen, she taught in the first Sunday school established in town and continued as a teacher for fifty years, when she removed to Cambridge, Mass., where she was for thirty years an earnest worker in the church there. During the war of the Rebellion she was the leading spirit of the town in encouraging enlistments, sending her son, only sixteen, to the front, visiting the Vermont brigade once herself, and nearly losing her life in work for the soldiers. The regular exercises in the church Thursday evening were given over to honoring Mrs. Haggood. There have been more fires in Burlington during the year 1911 than ever before, 143. But of these the loss has been comparatively small, not exceeding $45,000 and most of that being sustained in the burning of the Hibbard stable and the Henry C. Smith livery stable. The fire chief is much pleased with the working out of the fire automobile truck and estimates the cost of its maintenance much less than would have been that of a pair of horses. It has gone to every fire for 11 months and has traveled, in all, over 700 miles, yet its average cost of maintenance is 27 cents per day, while keeping a span of horses is estimated to cost $1.33 per day. Of the 143 fires, defective chimneys were the cause of most of them, overheated stoves next, and lamps caused seven. There was evidence of incendiaryism in the case of a few. IS NON-COMMITAL. Because He Hasn't Decided on City He Prefers for National Convention. Rutland, Dec. 29.—National Democrat.
