George B. Miles, Esteemed Citizen, Died at Age of 81.

George B. Miles passed quietly to rest Saturday evening, July 6, after a long illness. He was born in Stowe March 11, 1831. He served faithfully three years during the Civil war, in the 10th Vermont regiment, company G, as a volunteer. In 1866 he was married to Ase-nith Nutt, who has been a dutiful and faithful companion. Five sons survive him, namely, Fred and Bert of Montpelier, Harry of this place, Frank of Ver-shire, and Carl of Worcester, Vt., also a brother, Joseph, in Idaho, and two sisters, Mrs. Joseph Richardson of Elgin, Minn., and Mrs. C. S. Parkhurst, who has helped care for him the past year. During the last few years, Mr. Miles has been failing gradually and has been a great sufferer. He leaves a host of relatives and friends to mourn his loss. The funeral was held at his late home Monday, July 8, at 9 o'clock, and was conducted by Rev. O. L. Barnard. Interment was in the family lot in the Waits River cemetery. Much sympathy is extended to the bereaved family by their many friends.

A reception was given to Mr. and Mrs. Waldo E. Hood in the hall Saturday evening, July 6. Promenading was enjoyed until a late hour, after which cake and coffee were served. Dreamland's Special Feature.

"A Lodging for the Night," a very tense and dramatic picture of the old Southwest. It gives a wild night's adventure of an American in and near a Mexican inn. Two men sat behind the reviewer. They seem to have knocked around a good deal. All through the reel they kept making intelligent comments on it to each other. Their last remark was, "That's some picture." It is, indeed, full of good things, humor and humanity, and "some picture."

The difference between romance and realism is that one is what the human heart wants and the other is what it gets. It is only a rank pessimist who will say that, in real life, they never mix. This picture is a most remarkable mixture of both. The realism comes from the lively care, not only in the development of the plot, but in the smallest matters, too. The action reveals for instance, little unexpected flashes of character. Plainly, it was made by a man who sees life with his eyes open, and it is a picture to please thoroughly every kind of audience.
