Hardwick coming! The crack Hardwick baseball team, which won 13 straight games, having defeated such teams as the Chinese, the Barre A. C. and the Philadelphia Giants, makes its first appearance of the season in Barre Saturday, Aug. 10, on the Italian Athletic club grounds where it will cross bats with the L. A. C. Hardwick is coming here to trim the Italians, and its supporters have plenty of money to back their claim that they can do it.

A new program of vaudeville comes to the Pavilion to-day. The new acts for the last part of the week are Dick and Alice McAvoy and Natalie Normandy.

The act to be presented by Dick and Alice McAvoy is a comedy sketch, entitled "Herald Square Jim," introducing Mr. McAvoy in a comedy tough character. His impersonation of this character is said to be the best on the vaudeville stage. The team is well known to patrons of vaudeville theatres in the larger cities. Natalie Normandy is one of the many acts sent out by the Don Ramsay vaudeville producing agency. Several acts produced by the Ramsay agency have appeared at the Pavilion and all have been good. The act presented by Miss Normandy is said to be fully up to the standard of all acts from this well-known producing agency.

The picture program is excellent and consists of two dramatic, one comedy and one travel picture.

Ladies' Suits from Our Water Sale

We hardly expected that we would again have a chance to advertise these Suits. If ladies knew just how cheap they really were, they would not last one day. This sale is to close them up before we close Saturday night.

The following are the sizes, their original prices, and their sale prices. These Suits are damaged but very little, lots of them only needing a pressing. There are not all sizes. The following will tell you just what there is.

If what you want, try to be the first to get your chance.

These Suits are all with a red ticket showing that they were from the water sale of July 13.

REMNANTS

Our Remnant sale for last Saturday came on a rainy day, so that we have left some of the best values. In these are lots of lengths of materials for waists or children's dresses, also a lot of Trimmings that were marked by the piece of five and six yards at less than the regular price of one yard.

It's a good purchase for any family that has children to clothe. It is more than half your money saved by selecting from this Remnant sale.

These Remnants are marked a great deal lower than we ever have marked them before. We wanted to close them all out in one day, and if Saturday had been pleasant they would have been nearly all taken up.

Buy a New Idea Pattern to cut all your garments by. They cost only ten cents and save material, so the ladies say

The Daylight Store

Shipwrecked

A Story For Labor Day.

By EMERY C. TUCKER

Carl and Gretchen were sweethearts in Germany before Carl was ten years old.

It was very pretty to see them playing together on one or the other of the patches of ground belonging to their respective parents. Carl was a trifle darker than Gretchen, but that was because Gretchen's hair was like a cloud streak, with the faintest tint of yellow sunlight on it, and her eyes were blue as the heavens against which the cloud rests. Both were light complexioned, as most north Germans are, both had chubby red cheeks and white teeth.

When Carl came to be eighteen years old and Gretchen sixteen he was full of ambition to make a home for himself and his sweetheart. The little farm was too small even for his father and mother and the younger children, and he had no hope of making a home for himself in a land where persons always remain the same. So he resolved to go to America.

He had never spoken of love to his little playmate, not even when she had grown old enough to think of marriage. He did not speak of it when he told her he was going to America. He did not need to speak of it or to ask for a reply in words. When he announced his purpose Gretchen looked at him with her big blue eyes, and they filled with tears. He took her in his arms and told her he was going away to make a nest for them both, and when he had made enough he would send her the passage money to follow him. But when she asked how long that would take he said he could begin to lay up money for the home, which would require several years, her smart answer.

For at her age even one year seemed interminable.

Carl reached the new world in safety and, being a bright young fellow, succeeded in getting a carpenter to take him as an apprentice and teach him the trade. He mastered it readily, though he was obliged to serve out the time of his apprenticeship before he could begin to work for himself and earn money. And when that term was finished he was obliged to buy tools before he could be regularly employed. So it was three years before he could go to work as a member of the union, and even then he was put on merely as a helper.

But the time came at last when he earned enough money to send for Gretchen, and he didn't wait to earn enough to buy the home. He had got his trade and could lay up money, and he felt that with Gretchen to comfort him he would get on just as well peculiarly as if he were married. So he sent her the passage money, and when she received his letter containing the draft her heart bounded for joy. There was the regret at leaving her poor old father and mother, but it is the nature of the young to leave the parent nest to make one of their own.

It was springtime when Gretchen sailed from Bremen in the steamer of a liner for New York. Carl had written her that he would meet her at the immigrant station, where they would be married, so that she would not be sent back lest she be a charge on the nation.

Carl didn't think it necessary to tell her where to come to him in case he should miss her, for she could not get through unless he married her.

One morning a few days before the ship bearing his sweetheart was due Carl took up a newspaper and saw in large headlines an announcement that the vessel had fouled in a fog with another vessel. The passengers had all been removed to the colliding ship, which had carried them to Halifax.

Carl's joy in learning that his Gretchen had been saved was dashed at remembering that she would not enter New York as he had expected, and, having only funds sufficient to bring her across the ocean, she might not be able to come to New York at all. Even if she could how would she find him in so large a city?

Carl spent what money he had in a trip to Halifax to find her, but could find no trace of her. He and Gretchen were irrevocably separated, and there was no hope of finding each other except by accident.

Five years passed. Carl had become a master carpenter and was making money. When Labor day approached that year he was chosen to lead his fellow workmen in the parade and was made one of the floor managers at the 17th in the evening. He was making up a set for a dance and, there being only three couples available, looked about for a partner for himself. Seeing a young woman with hair almost white sitting alone, he approached her and asked her to dance. He was surprised to hear a cry, a sob:

"A. A.!"

Then he knew Gretchen. They had found each other. Though it was in a ballroom with hundreds of persons looking on, they flew into each other's arms, conscious of none except each other.

Gretchen on arriving at Halifax had started to go to New York, stopping by the way to earn money enough to pay her way on the trains. It took her three months to reach the metropolis, and when she arrived Carl had left the place where he had last written her. Then she began to earn her living, ever hoping that among the countless throngs she might meet him.

FIRST AMERICAN HEROINE.

Gunner Corbin's Widow, Who Fought at Mount Washington.

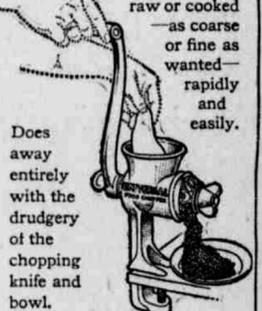

The first woman who fought for American liberty was Gunner Corbin's widow, at the capture of Mount Washington by the Scotch and Hessians. In the midst of the fight Gunner Corbin, struck by a ball, fell dead at his wife's feet as she was aiding him in his duties.

It was not an uncommon occurrence for Irishwomen (as at Limerick) to share the dangers of the bivouacs, as instance the deeds of that other heroine, Molly Pitcher. Instantly, without a word, she stepped into his place and worked the gun with redoubled skill and vigor, fighting bravely until she sank to the earth, pierced by three grapeshot! Though terribly wounded, she finally recovered, but was disabled for life.

A soldier's half pay and the value of a soldier's suit of clothes annually voted her by the Continental congress (but soon discontinued) were all the reward that the first woman who fought for American liberty ever received for such heroic love, courage and suffering.—E. F. DeLancy in Magazine of American History.
