SOUTH RANDOLPH

Your correspondent attended the Chelsea and Tunbridge Farmers' association meet at Brookbank, Tunbridge, last Friday and ascended to the top of the mountain in the Ford car that twice crossed the continent last summer—the first to the top of the mountain. One other car (a Ford) driven by Earl DeLano of Randolph, ventured to the top in the afternoon; all of the other cars and nearly all the horse-drawn carriages were content to stop their upward flight at a little more than half way to the top, where the people ate their lunches and finished the climb atop to the top, where they took in the fine scenery and listened to the short discourses by County Agent Loveland and State Organizer Coryell. The day was hot, scarcely a breath of air was stirring, even at the top of the mountain.

Your correspondent has attended many picnics on the top of this mountain, some 20 or 30 years ago and it has been usually too cool for comfort, even in dog day weather. About 25 years ago more than 1,000 persons attended a picnic there and among the speakers was Col. Hooker of Brattleboro. At that time they were exploiting the granite that lies about the foot of the mountain. Granite was quarried here quite extensively for several years. Railroad surveys were made to the quarries from both the Central Vermont and Passumpsic roads, but it was impossible to get the necessary capital for building the road, so quarrying stopped and the derricks have been allowed to rot down and bushes have grown up all over the quarries, hiding them from view.

At the foot of the mountains are extensive marl beds where some over one-half a century ago large quantities of lime used to be burned. One purpose of the lime was to explore the marl beds. Most of the soil in this section of Vermont is deficient in lime for the successful raising of the clovers, alfalfa, etc. This bed of lime is so situated that it can be drawn on, a down grade to most of the surrounding towns. Fifty years ago there were living near these marl beds some 25 families on 25 well-tilled farms with a naturally good soil; to-day these lands are mostly vacant, with buildings mostly gone. Some hay is cut but none of it fenced for pasture. What a chance for a large sheep ranch! Plenty of water and feed. To-day fencing for sheep is an easy and not costly job with woven wire fence. Some of the meadows, lime being so handy here, could be used to raise large crops of alfalfa to winter the sheep on. Last summer on our coast-to-coast trip we passed through many large sheep ranches where the water for the sheep had to be carried or the sheep driven miles and miles when they had any water to drink. No dew falls there at night as here in the East, so the sheep, to live, have to have drinking water every day. No such condition exists here. Plenty of cold spring water, brooks and plenty of dew on the grass in the morning, and more green grass on an acre here than on 25 acres of the western sheep ranches we saw. In all the sheep ranches in the West the sheep had to be guarded day and night from the ravages of the coyotes or prairie wolves, and other wild animals. Here in the East late years one great menace to sheep raising is the almost useless "our dog." They are getting to be too numerous and should be taxed out of existence. Let the next legislature cut down the tax on useful automobiles and raise the tax on useless dogs. The old adage that every poor man kept a dog and every 4—poor man kept two, is nearly true to-day. The sheep and wool business, whether under Republican or Democratic tariff, looks bright for years to come. One word as to what Speaker Coryell had to say in his talk on the "mountain"; he laid great stress on what the farmers' organizations of Vermont had done to help the Vermont farmers, among which was the abolition of the long haul or the renting of railroad cars for transporting milk to Boston markets. I am afraid after Oct. 1 it will be found a detriment to Vermont farmers whose milk goes to Boston, but it will help Massachusetts farmers near Boston and the railroads who do the carrying. "Somebody was fooled."

Samuel Mills of this village, who is considered a very careful driver, met with a slight accident Tuesday while on the way to Montpelier. Something went wrong with the steering gear of his car and the car pitched into a bank on Orange heights, neither the car nor the four passengers suffering more than slight damage. Besides himself and wife he had Misses Elizabeth and Mabel Hall for passengers. The latter was the only one thrown out and she lost one tooth and was cut about the face. A St. Johnsbury car came along and took the women in his car and carried them home while Mr. Mills waited for help from Groton.

The funeral of Mrs. Swan Peterson was held Wednesday at her home, Rev. Thomas Simpson officiating. Mrs. Peterson had been in a critical condition for several weeks. Dr. Frost of Hanover, N. H., attended her some two weeks ago, but gave the family no encouragement. Her father and invalid mother and one sister and brother are left to mourn her loss. She was a woman highly respected by all who knew her. The family came to this town some three years ago from Concord, N. H.
