FRANK E. LANGLEY, Publisher
Roosevelt is needed to put a little punch in the Republican campaign. Hughes can continue to do the heavy talking.

Firing 11 miles at an unseen target, American gunners scored four hits in a dozen shots. No need of a barn door for them.

Arthur P. Howard, once an editor in Vermont, is now a Democratic candidate for Congress in Massachusetts. It is worthy of note that Howard did not change his political stripes till after he left Vermont.

The managers of the Dog River Valley Fair association have been making arrangements for a big exhibition at the Northfield fair grounds on Sept. 20, 27 and 28, and they are hoping thereby to merit a large attendance. The Northfield fair will be one of the last of the season's outdoor agricultural exhibitions, but it will be by no means one of the least.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels' efforts to extract joy out of the Maine election result by asserting that a Republican majority of 14,000 is "virtually a Democratic victory" shows that he became an expert at self-delusion while he was telling himself that the United States had an adequate navy, after which he went and recommended a vast increase of that self-same navy. Perhaps he will see the exact state of the Maine election just as he had an eye-opener about the needs of the navy.

Peacham's loss in the death of Dr. Albert J. Mackey, a prominent citizen, is the more pronounced because of the fact that he was the town's only physician and, of course, the health officer of the community. Besides that, he had filled other important positions in the town. The removal by death of the only practicing physician after he had gone in and out of the families for a score of years causes a serious sense of personal loss on the part of nearly everyone in a town the size of Peacham, and hence Peacham's mourning is sincere to-day.

The career of Frederick Hale of Maine in the United States will be watched with not a little interest, even by people outside of the Pine Tree state, because of the desire to see if Hale is such an incapable man as his political opponents tried to make him out during the campaign which ended last Monday. It does not seem possible that Maine would elect to the United States Senate a man no better fitted for such a high position than he was depicted to be by persons having a hostile intent against him. There is a possibility that his opponents ran somewhat beyond the bounds of the truth in their anxiety to beat him.

A BIG, CLEAN EXHIBIT—STATE FAIR.

Vermonters cannot fail to feel a sense of satisfaction over the Vermont state fair. It is not the largest exhibition in New England and does not claim to be. It does claim to be a fairly complete representation of Vermont's best products and therein lies its marked degree of success. If it be horses, livestock, garden products, racing events or the thousand and one other features that go to make a great fair there can be no gainsaying that the Vermont state fair stands very high indeed. There is diversity enough to please almost any fancy; and that which is offered in nearly all departments is excellent. A high standard is maintained throughout the exhibits from first to last and it is a valuable experience for anyone to inspect the exhibits with an eye to acquiring information.

Just so long as the Vermont state fair is maintained on the high plane on which it is now conducted it will deserve the support of the people of the state, and of the hundreds of others who come from neighboring states to see a really first-class exhibition. At the present time the Vermont state fair stands for quality, and for efficiency of administration as well. We trust that it will continue to be kept on that plane and that just as soon as it begins to deteriorate new blood will be brought into the administration of affairs. As Vermont's show window it cannot be allowed to become cheap or tawdry.

POLITICAL ADVERTISING IN VERMONT.

In the primary canvass just brought to a close there was a general resort to the use of newspaper advertising to set forth the merits of candidates and, we regret to say, in some cases to vilify the opposing candidate. This has taken the place almost entirely of the old-fashioned method of "hiring a hall" and holding a caucus. Whether the new means of reaching the people is more effective than the plan of speech-making may be open to question in the minds of many people of the state, but it is certain that a far greater number of people can be spoken to than is possible under the method of "hiring a hall" for the purpose. In the latter situation the effect is largely confined to the physical limitations of the hall, albeit the inclination of the people has to be taken into consideration as a factor. In any event the effect is not far-reaching unless public feeling runs at high tension or some speaker of real renown is scheduled to do the speaking. A dozen such meetings would have to be held in order to reach as many people as a single issue of a weekly newspaper in Vermont would come in touch with; and the cost of a dozen rallies would run far in excess of the price of a small advertisement in a weekly newspaper. In fact, a large number of newspapers could be utilized for the same expenditure for advertising space as would be spent for a dozen rallies. And we have an opinion, too, that the reader of political advertising in a newspaper digests the ideas presented therein much more closely than he does in listening to the spoken word because there are diverting influences which attend oratory that are not present when the average reader of a newspaper sits down to peruse his favorite public print. It would seem that political advertising under reasonable conditions has come to stay in Vermont.

With Due Allowance.

It happened at a little town in Ohio. A visiting easterner stood on the veranda of a little hotel there, watching the sun go down in a splendor of purple and gold. "By George," he exclaimed to an impressive native lounging against a post. "That's a gorgeous sunset, isn't it?" The native slanted his head a little and looked critically at the glowing west. "Not bad," he drawled. "Not had for a little place like Hoopville."—Kansas City Journal.
Congressman George Edmund Foss, a former St. Albanian, won out by an overwhelming majority for re-nomination at the September primaries held last Wednesday in Chicago.
St. Albans boys have caused the police to issue a warning because of their rowdiness.

Of Course Not.
"Does your husband do foolish things with his money?"
"Well, I wouldn't say that. He gives it all to me."—Detroit Free Press.

Mother (to little girl engaged in grooming with a nail brush a newly born kitten)—Oh, Maisie, I don't think that the mummy-cat would like to see you doing it that way.

Maisie—Will, Mummy, I couldn't lick it.—Punch.

Through the mistake of a ticket agent at New York, a Montenegrin youth, who has seen 18 months' service with his country's troops, arrived in Burlington this week instead of in East Barrington, Mass. A young man befriended him, found out his predicament, and after giving him board and lodging for a night, saw that he got on the right train for East Barrington, where it is understood, he is to go to school.

Along the Sidelines.

It is now but a question of a few hours before the western football enthusiasts will have a chance to see the husky eleven plunge the lines of their opponents in their efforts to reach the desired goal. The western teams, which will battle this afternoon on the gridiron are the University of California and the Olympic club at Berkeley, Cal. The eastern gridiron season will not be ushered in until a week from to-day, when Harvard meets Colby for the initial game of their schedule.

While the heat interfered with the preliminary workout of the Holy Cross eleven Thursday, Coach Kelley held a brief meeting with the candidates. Thirty men reported to practice.

Head Coach Leo Leary announced the division of the first and second string men yesterday at Soldiers' field, when he gave the men on the first squad red sweaters and the remaining men on the schedule went out to practice under the direction of Bob Guild. There were 42 in the squad of red jerseyed men and 28 in the squad under Coach Guilds. E. L. Casey looks to be a promising man in the backfield and will endeavor to fill the shoes of Brickley and Hahan, the stars of the Harvard team during the past four years. Casey played a strong game on the freshmen team last year; he is an accurate kicker and plays a good game on the defense.

About a dozen of the Brown football warriors arrived at Providence Thursday and with the addition of several who were already there practice was in order within a short time after their arrival. Brown has a much larger squad of veterans on their roster than at the beginning of the past season, and with this strength combined with a wealth of new men on the field, their prospects of a fast eleven is better than for several seasons. Archie Hahn, the track coach, is added to the coaching staff, making four who will try to teach the Brown men the inside game. Hahn has been in a position, where he knows a good deal of football; he coached the Whitman college eleven at Walla Walla, Washington, before going to Brown.

Burlington's garbage collectors are now garbed in blue serge suits.
