WATERBURY

The Waterbury Savings Bank & Trust Co. has recently installed in its rooms the machine bookkeeping and statement system, by which all the work of recording and figuring customers' accounts is handled on a bookkeeping machine. Checks and deposits are entered on the ledgers and the necessary addition and subtraction is done automatically. The sheet containing the record of a person's account is placed in the machine and the old balance printed in the proper column. Any checks drawn are listed and subtracted automatically from the old balance. If a deposit has been made, this is printed in the deposit column and also added automatically. The new balance is ready by depressing a key and operating the machine. The statement which each one receives of his account is a duplicate of the ledger page, posted every day from the original checks and deposit slips. The system affords protection against any and all errors in figuring, it being impossible for the machine to make a mistake. It also expedites the work and has made possible the handling of the extra business done by this bank without additional office help. The patrons of this bank should appreciate all that is being done to extend a better bank service. This machine, also a Burroughs, added to the Burroughs adding machine, makes the work complete and is handled by the teller of the bank, Mrs. Emma Griffin.

ECONOMY IN FOOD STUFFS.

Price Differences Depend Chiefly on Flavor and Color. Flavor and color have an important bearing on the prices which must be paid for the various edible fats used in the home since all are regarded as wholesome when of good quality and practicality by the body from each. The housekeeper, therefore, must decide usually what she is willing to pay for relatively superficial properties in the foods. These facts are pointed out in a recent professional paper of the U. S. department of agriculture, bulletin 469, "Fats and Their Economical Use in the Home," prepared by the office of Home economics of the department. In discussing the selection of fats for special uses the bulletin says:

In general it pays always to buy fats of such good quality that none will have to be thrown away through spoilage. In some instances a higher-priced article may be more economical in the end, as, for example, clean, sanitary butter, as compared to a cheaper but less sanitary product. In some instances, where taste or flavor only is involved, a less expensive table fat may answer quite satisfactorily the purpose of a more expensive one. For example, the chief use of table oils is as an ingredient of salad dressings, and when a characteristic flavor or is not especially desired good grades of cottonseed and peanut oils, having a bland flavor, may be used when these are less expensive than the corresponding grades of olive oil.

Fats used for shortening—that is, in mixture with doughs, etc.—influence the appearance, flavor, texture, composition, keeping quality, and cost of the foods in which they are incorporated. In selecting shortening fats, flavor and odor are to be considered, but attractive appearance and color are of less importance, since in cooking these are usually masked. Other qualities being equal, those culinary fats are more economical and desirable which possess the best keeping quality; that is, the least tendency to become rancid. Also, for general use shortening fats give the best results if they are neither too hard nor too soft to be easily mixed with the other ingredients of the dough at ordinary temperatures.

Fats used as medium for cooking in such operations as frying should be carefully selected, since they influence the flavor, appearance, and texture of the foods cooked in them, as is evident when one recalls the bitter flavor imparted to fried foods by burned or rancid fat. Preference should be given to a fat which does not scorch too readily at the temperature most commonly used for frying. Experiments in the laboratory of the office of home economics indicate that butter and lard scorch at a lower temperature than beef or mutton fats and cottonseed, peanut, or coconut oils. For this reason, therefore, the latter fats are preferable for deep frying, which requires high temperature.

Economic Use of Fats.

It is a waste, the bulletin points out, to use more fat than a good recipe calls for. It is well known that too much butter makes a cake soggy, while a salad dressing with too much oil tastes "fat." The following are additional examples of ways in which economy may be secured. It is more economical to stir butter into cooked vegetables just before they are served rather than while cooking, and the flavor thus imparted is more pronounced. Furthermore, if added before cooking much of the butter is lost unless the water in which the vegetables are boiled is served with them. Instead of adding butter to vegetables many people cook fat ham, bacon, or salt pork with them and relish the characteristic flavor thus imparted.

Much fat may be saved by home rendering of the trimmings from fat meat. The following method of rendering fats, found to be very satisfactory in the laboratory of the office of home economics, may be applied in the home. The fat is cut finely with an ordinary household meat chopper or sausage grinder and is then melted in a double boiler until completely melted. The melted fat is then strained through a rather thick cloth (medium fine huckaback, for instance) to remove the finely divided bits of tissue. The advantage of this method is that since the material to be rendered is finely divided the fat separates readily from the enclosing tissue at a temperature very little above its melting point, and there is no danger of scorching it as in the older open-kettle method.

State Branch of League to Enforce Peace Begins Campaign.

The Vermont state branch of the League to Enforce Peace has established headquarters at 188 Main street, Burlington, and has begun a vigorous, statewide campaign. The first big meeting in Vermont will be held at Montpelier on March 8, with ex-President William H. Taft, president of the League to Enforce Peace, as the principal speaker. The local branch is endeavoring to have President Taft speak in Burlington on March 9, and in St. Albans on March 10. Meetings will be held all over the state in the near future and the speakers will include such men as President Butler of Harvard university, President Lowell of Columbia university, President Benton of the University of Vermont and other prominent men from within and without the state. The Burlington office is virtually an "information bureau" and will be glad to answer any questions relative to the project, received in person or through the mails. The state committee desires to make it possible for all citizens of Vermont to have an opportunity to acquaint themselves with the program of the league and to become members, for which no fees or dues are required.

AMUSEMENT NOTES

"Battle Cry of Peace."

William J. Ferguson, who created the part of the great emancipator in J. Stuart Blackton's "The Battle Cry of Peace," to be shown at the Pavilion theatre on Jan. 19 and 20, is more or less of an interesting personage. He is pointed at by the small boys, men and women as the only living man who was on the stage at the Ford theatre in Washington at the time President Lincoln was assassinated. And that is some distinction.

At the time of Mr. Lincoln's assassination, Mr. Ferguson was callboy at the theatre. At the moment of the assassination he was standing in the wings with Laura Keane, exactly opposite the presidential box, which was so constructed that only a person standing on the stage could see what occurred in it. In addition to his duties as callboy, Mr. Ferguson was putting on a short comedy scene with Miss Keane. He saw John Wilkes Booth appear suddenly in the rear of the presidential box, point a derringer at the base of the president's skull and pull the trigger. He then leaped from the box to the stage, a drop of 12 feet, catching his spur in the single American flag which was draped simply over the edge of the box as he did so.

Although Mr. Ferguson has been in the theatrical profession all his life and has appeared in leading Broadway productions for many years, "The Battle Cry of Peace" was the first and only production in which he has appeared in the role of Abraham Lincoln.—adv.
