

ABOUT THE STATE

HAPPENINGS OF INTEREST FROM DIFFERENT SECTIONS

The Norwich Congregational church observed its 100th anniversary Nov. 20.

The annual meeting of the Vermont State Grange is to be held in Burlington Dec. 11-13.

Allen W. Britton shot a deer during the open season almost in his front yard in Fecheville.

E. A. Whitcomb, proprietor of the Newfane Inn, has decided to close the hotel until April 1.

Mr. Jones, who runs a market garden in Burlington, raised last season 800 bushels of carrots.

Mr. and Mrs. Luther Taylor observed their 50th wedding anniversary at their home in Pittsfield Nov. 21.

Mrs. Polly Ballou, one of the oldest members of the Newfane branch of the Red Cross, has made, cut and filled 30 comfort pillows.

Mrs. Sally Perrin of Greensboro, aged 82 years, has knit seven pairs of woolen socks and made six pairs of hospital socks in the last 18 days.

Rev. Frederick E. Buckley of Waterbury, Conn., from 1889 to 1892 rector of St. Andrew's church in St. Johnsbury, died at his home Nov. 21 at the age of 61 years.

A valuable cow belonging to Arthur Warren of Newfane was choked to death recently when the stable fork gave way during the night and the cow down through, where she hung.

Windsor school directors have appointed Dr. Winthrop Blanchard as examining physician of school children in that place. He must examine all of the 500 children at least once a year and make a visit to the schools once in two months.

Two Springfield men, Warren Thompson and Ralph Woodman, have enlisted for the service of gun-repairing at the front, one of the most hazardous positions in the whole army, which is shown by the fact that only 14 out of the whole American army have volunteered for the position. Mr. Thompson and Mr. Woodman being two of the 14.

While Mrs. Robert H. Rice and her three children of Conway, Mass., were visiting at the home of her father, E. D. Clayton, in North Hartland, last week, Mrs. Rice and one of the children called at a neighbor's and while there the child got hold of a bottle of oil of wintergreen, swallowing the cork and some of the oil, so that death ensued 14 hours later after great suffering.

Mr. Putnam, a representative of the Cooley-Wright company, foundrymen of Waterbury, has been in Windsor and made arrangements to open a foundry there in the old brick depot formerly used by the Central Vermont railway. Probably 75 men will be employed there at first. This has long been recognized as a good field for a foundry, with two machine shops in full operation in Windsor.

The wealth of America is in factories and storehouses, on docks and in stockyards. An appalling amount of this wealth has been destroyed by fire. Confagurations where they will do the most harm have been monotonously frequent. Often it appears after the fire—that the building or plant had been inadequately guarded. One watchman often an aged or infirm man, is not enough to watch over a structure which contains supplies essential to the war and worth millions.

Some system of protection on a national scale must be provided for our stores, every pound of which is needed for the war. The first impulse is to say that soldiers now in the service of the nation should be assigned to the duty of safeguarding America's material wealth. But the soldiers have other duties.

The men who have been passed by the rigid army surgeons must give every moment they have to the intensive training in which they are now engaged. We have begun soldiering late and must let nothing interfere with military education. The physically fit men must be trained for the trenches.

If the nation requires men for police duty it should consider the men who are not wholly fitted for the exacting requirements of soldiering abroad. Every day men eager to serve their country are turned away from the recruiting offices because they have not quite the physique for members of an expeditionary force.

This is where the guards for duty here should be found. The important service of guarding America's supplies could be entrusted to them.—Boston Globe.

The Service of the Newspapers.

Puck, who threatened to "put a girder round about the earth in forty minutes," would be answered by the words of the query: "Why take so long with that?"

Our newspapers bring us the records of the last few hours in chaos-stricken Russia; they enable us to visualize the onward rush of the German hordes to the plains of northern Italy; they tell us little human-interest stories of the thoughts, the viewpoints, and the adventures of the soldiers of the republic who are awaiting their turns in the trenches of northern France; they tell us of the events of the day on the British battle lines, and how these strong sons of freedom, in union with the inspired fighters of France, are wielding the hammer of Thor on the crumbling German defenses.

The long reaches of material space have been wiped out, and man has conquered the time-factor. The miracle of the modern newspaper is accepted as a commonplace of our daily lives. We wear Carlyle's faded time-annihilating hat. We are present, in spirit, at the battle fronts, and feel the thrill of the human drama whose course will shape the destinies of all the earth's peoples for centuries to come.

It is a great thing to live in this fearful hour—a greater thing to sense its awful import to mankind and to lend one's full strength to the forces of light. It is a great thing to be a newspaper man just now, and to help to keep the world's communities of free peoples in touch and in union. "All service ranks the same with God," but this service of the printed word calls to it the men and women who have faith and vision and understanding—those who can see more than the conflict which is tearing at the vitals of the nations—who can see beyond it, to a reconstructed social order, in which war shall be no more and in which "He whose right it is shall reign."

SHEEP SHIPPED BY BARGE.

Sent to Mountain Ranges in Western States.

By the use of a three-decker barge capable of carrying 2,700 sheep at a time, hitherto unused range for approximately 75,000 sheep at the head of Lake Chelan on the Chelan national forest, Washington, has been made available for use.

This, according to grazing experts of the forest service, is an example of the way in which new range on the national forests is being opened up in an effort to increase the country's meat supply.

Lake Chelan, which, officers of the forest service say, is one of the most beautiful bodies of water in the West, is 32 miles long. While the head of the lake is accessible only by boat and narrow mountain trails, the lower end is convenient to a railroad and also to the bunchgrass ranges of eastern Washington upon which the sheep men of that region have for many years wintered large numbers of sheep. They lacked summer range, however. The summer range at the head of Lake Chelan, it is explained, is particularly good, but, cut off from the nearest ranches by a long stretch of exceedingly rough country over which sheep can not be driven without severe losses.

Officers of the forest service suggested the construction of a barge to be towed by a small steamer, which would make it possible to transport the sheep to the head of the lake. The suggestion was carried out with the aid of the railroad, and 37,000 sheep were put on this practically new range the first season. Not only was the national forest land utilized, but the route up the lake offers a satisfactory way to a large adjoining area in British Columbia which, though inaccessible from the Canadian side may now be reached from this side.

The plan was so successful that the stockmen intend to construct another and larger barge for use next season.

A Boy Who Was Too Young to Go Says: "I'm only a kid—just entering high school. Maybe the war isn't supposed to affect us kids to any great extent. But somehow I'm not the same since my brother Bill went for France."

"How I wanted to go with him! Mother tried to smile bravely when she bade him good-bye for the last time, and I had smoked furiously while he was waiting for mother and Bill to finish their last long hug; then he reached up and dived into the fire. Dad was looking hard into the fire, and mother had a faraway look in her wet eyes. I'm pretty old to think of it. But I couldn't help it; I crawled right up on mother's chair and put my head on her shoulder. "He's fighting for you, dear," said mother, kissing me after a minute's silence, "for you and Jewell."

"Bill fighting for Jewell and myself? I think I'm beginning to understand."—December American Magazine.

Tragedy. A headache and repeated demands from a six-year-old daughter had kept Mrs. Horton awake nearly all night. At 5 in the morning, when she had at last dropped sound asleep, says Turner's Magazine, the little girl called softly from her crib:

"Mother!"

"No answer. Again, a little louder: "Mother!"

"Mother! said nothing. Again the child's voice, this time still louder: "Mother!"

"Well, what is it?"

"Mother, isn't it too bad that one of Harry McCole's polliwogs died?"
