LAST INDEPENDENT KING.

George Tubou, II, of Tonga, Whose Kingdom Was in Pacific Ocean.

London, June 19.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press).—King George Tubou II, of Tonga, whose death is announced, was the last of the independent kings of the Pacific islands. He succeeded his great-grandfather in 1893. At the time he was a college boy of 21, at school in New Zealand, fonder of cricket and rowing than of the science of government. Physically, however, he filled the post of king to perfection, being over six feet in height and weighing nearly 275 pounds.

During his period of king he obstinately refused to keep within his official income of $6,000 a year, and he always succeeded in inducing the British treasury officials to endorse his overdrafts. His promise to repay these advances were heartfelt at the time, but never materialized into anything substantial.

For the first eight years of his reign he refused to marry, and he had many a quarrel with his chiefs and nobles on the subject. After throwing over the princesses whom they picked for him one after another, he made his own choice, offending the nobility by picking out a girl of the common people named Lavinia, whose daughter now succeeds to the throne. The nobility boycotted the king for a long time after the marriage.

In 1900, when the British sent a mission to Tonga to negotiate a treaty which would place the islands more securely under the protection of the British crown, King George appointed an easy-going old gentleman as his plenipotentiary, but conducted all the negotiations himself. He made notes of the proceedings in shorthand, and prepared draft clauses of the treaty on his own typewriter. He received the British commissioners with a guard of honor consisting of his entire standing army of twenty men, dressed in artillery uniforms. They fired the proper salute from field guns and then doubled back to the palace to parade as infantry, while their brass band played the Tonga national anthem.

On King George's visit to the British ship, which housed the treaty commissioners, he appeared in the uniform of a general of the Tonga army, his breast covered with decorations. He explained these by saying that, as no foreign sovereign had seen fit to confer a decoration on him, he had instituted one of his own, and was wearing all the grades, from grand cross to companion.

There is a story that the Tongans declared their neutrality at the beginning of the present war, but the story is untrue. The Tongans are the best-educated of the Polynesian natives. In their native college they learn mathematics, history and shorthand. They are excellent carpenters and boat builders, and their remarkable fondness for cricket made it necessary to prohibit the game for six days a week if famine was to be averted, for the plantations were entirely neglected for the cricket fields.

"The trouble lasted three weeks before I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I was soon relieved and I used about one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment when my face was completely healed." (Signed) Miss Eva Dussault, 14 Avery St., Providence, R. I., Nov. 23, 1917.

An Advertisement for Women About the Men

Women usually have a good deal to say about what clothes the men wear; more than they like to admit sometimes.

Women are good judges of quality and style; they know values; right now when they are giving their time and energies to war work, they want to be sure that the men are getting their money's worth in clothes; that they're not wasting the Nation's resources.

At this store of ours, we're selling clothes that save labor, wool and money; we feel that it's service we owe the country and the men and women of this city.

Hart Schaffner & Marx make the clothes; most of you women know what that means. When you ask the men in your family to be sure to get such quality, you're doing another good thing for the cause.
