The dramatic entry of the consolidated and galvanized Sprung Heller-Green monopoly into the arena of local theatricals is challenging attention on every street corner. Prospective patrons of the big enterprise which is to be staged along with Herz Mercer's last big release are urged to make their reservations early. The proceeds go to the City hospital relief fund. Meanwhile, preparations for the big event are rapidly drawing near the climax. So, as a matter of fact, you get the rest of the show for nothing and leave the theatre owing the hospital another admission.

A recent statement made in a circular mailed out by the patrol committee has caused considerable questioning of the highway commissioner by those who know that money from the federal government has been spent by the state and used in the well posted upon what the state is doing with the federal aid money. As far as the government is concerned, Vermont spent $22,844.49, because four projects have been approved by the government, one of which is completed. On this $5,096.23 was paid by the government as its share of the expenses, while the other three are ready and would have been completed last year had not the government stopped the work because of the war. Contracts for the expenditure of $45,088.94 more will be signed before July 1, while estimates are being received upon $68,128.92, which will be signed before July 1, 1920, so that it is seen that the state has done all that it could since the enactment of the law.

Ireland.

Rightly to interpret the two great meetings in Manchester on Sunday night, held in the interest of Ireland's liberties, one must see them against the background of the whole great series of similar gatherings in the United States. This was no isolated incident—no little, local affair. It was only one of the tongues of a flame that has been lighted from end to end of our land.

And right here, in this simile, lies the living significance of all these manifestations—the flame of devotion to Ireland never really dies out in America. It may seem to burn low at times, but any least stirring of the air fans it into new activity, and with each renewal it is seen to have laid hold upon new fuel, and to be burning more brightly than ever before.

In this instance—and what is meant is not the Manchester meeting alone, but the whole American movement in behalf of Ireland—in this instance, it is more than a breath of air that has stirred the fire of Irish devotion into new activity. The whole meaning of the war, as this is interpreted by the American president, has swept into the hearts of men who love Ireland, and the flame corresponds to the strength of its reviving gale.

This, we take it, has become the very keynote of the Irish contention—this interpretation of the war as a great contest of ideas out from which must come the principle of the self-determination of nations and people. Friends of Ireland have seized upon this general proposition, and applied it to that which is near their hearts. Nor is there any argument against their so doing. If the president is right, self-determination relates to Ireland as much as it does to Poland, or Slovakia—it relates as much to any part of the British empire or the United States—the Philippine islands or Porto Rico, for example—as it does to any part of the German empire or of the former Austro-Hungarian empire.

But all this aside—here is this impressive fact of the unquenchable interest of a great part of the people of the United States in the Irish question. And this in itself is enough to make that question one of the very first consequence. The peace of the world depends upon the best of feeling between the United States and Great Britain. No league of nations would be worth the formulating that is not founded upon good understanding between the great English-speaking nations. And so long as the Irish problem remains, so long as a great part of our people believe that justice is not done to Ireland, there is an element of weakness in the relations between these nations. The surest way to bind fast the hearts of Americans and Britishers, brought into a new sense of union by a common service, would be for Britain to give to the people of Ireland full opportunity to work out its own political salvation, according to principles of justice, and within the limits recognized by free men as necessary to the maintenance of national security.—Manchester Union.

Farm Bureau Organize Work.

The first completely organized means in Hamilton county, Ohio, for securing local co-operation in setting improved agricultural practices at work was the farm bureau. It has a total membership of 1,900. Through the county agent this farm bureau has stimulated the use of 2,500 tons of home-ground limestone, introduced four portable lime pulverizers, started a community tilling project that will increase production on many a loaf-acre, and has saved the county $2,000 worth of wheat by co-operating with the threshermen and farmers in placing canvas under the thrashing machines.
