A WELCOME TO MAJOR GENERAL EDWARDS.

In an unpretentious way the people of Barre and the surrounding towns wish to convey to Major General Clarence R. Edwards to-day their appreciation of his leadership of the 28th (New England) division during the greater part of its battle service in the great war. They feel keen satisfaction over the quality of that leadership and they express confidence that whatever could have been done for the men in that well-known fighting unit was done under the direction of Major General Edwards. So it is with pleasure they welcome that commanding officer into their midst and they trust that some measure of the sincere good will of the people of Vermont will be conveyed to him through the medium of the hospitality extended this day. Barre has no desire that its hospitality shall stand out in the long list of courtesies extended to him but desires rather that its presentation shall serve merely as one reminder of the kindly feeling which all New England feels toward him. Therefore, in the name of the people of Barre and vicinity, The Times extends this printed word of welcome, hoping for Major General Edwards a pleasant stay in this community.

The rival factions in Berlin are more anxious to get into the police station than the average American is.

With a Vermont man winning the tennis singles championship of Florida this winter, the Floridians do not find this business of taking things altogether one-sided. But when it comes to money, they have a rather easy time of it.

The riot in London in which American soldiers were engaged, along with British and Canadian soldiers, against the London police, is warning that the American forces not directly concerned in policing the German territory ought to be brought home as rapidly as possible.

Col. Ira L. Reeves, former professor of military science and tactics at the University of Vermont and more recently president of Norwich university, finds himself right in his element as president of the new American Army university, which has been opened in Beaune, in the southern part of France. He should be able to serve very acceptably in such a position.

The sight of President Wilson, Democrat, and ex-President Taft, Republican, swinging across the stage of the Metropolitan opera house in New York, arm in arm, must have been so unusual as to cause much of the uproar of enthusiasm that greeted their appearance. If President Wilson and Senator Lodge should do the same act, the audience would probably be struck dumb.

Marshal Joffre, the man who stopped the Huns from reaching Paris at the outset of the war, is outspoken in favor of the proposed league of nations, his position indicating that there is promise of much accomplishment through the proposed world league to prevent war. We in the United States, who are far removed from old world intrigue, should give full weight to the testimony of those upon whom much of the burden of responsibility incident to that intrigue has fallen. Marshal Joffre is one of those who have borne that responsibility.

It will be a graceful act on the part of the Vermont Press association to erect a memorial tablet at East Poultney in memory of Horace Greeley, who built the foundation for his great journalistic career in a little printshop in the small Vermont village. Vermont has sent out some eminent journalists in national life, and perhaps the greatest of them was Horace Greeley. A tablet erected in honor of him at East Poultney will serve to remind Vermont people of the honor that was their state's and may serve as an incentive to great effort on the part of some of the rising generations in Vermont.

The Grand Trunk railway, forced to compete to a certain extent with American railways, found it hard work without the lavish financial support which the United States government has given to the American lines. That may explain in part the necessity for the appointment of a receiver to take over the operation of the Grand Trunk. Another drag on the Grand Trunk no doubt was the department which had to do with the owning and operating of a chain of hotels in connection with the railroad. American railroads would find themselves very much handicapped were they saddled with the burden of running hotels too.

Miss Elsie Gordon Tells How Cuticura Healed Her Pimples

"Itching and eczema started on my foot due to the heat of my blood. It itched so that I could not sleep at night. The eczema started in scales on the side near the ankle, and spread to the sole, and when I scratched, my foot got sore. I had to wear white stockings and low shoes all the time, or I would not be able to work."

"I read an advertisement for Cuticura and I decided to try them. I used one cake of Cuticura Soap and part of a box of Cuticura Ointment when I was healed." (Signed) Miss Elsie Gordon, 21 Waite St., Springfield, Mass., July 26, 1918.

Once clear keep your skin clear by using Cuticura Soap and Ointment for every-day toilet purposes and Cuticura Talcum to perfume.

show the advisability of having government bonds registered, for in case the bonds fall into unauthorized hands they would be of no good to the thieves or anyone other than the persons in whose names the registration was made. This is in distinction from coupon bonds which, of course, would be salable by anyone who should gain possession of them. If registered bonds should be stolen, or lost, it would be possible for the owner to make good his loss by applying to the treasury department and, going through the usual course of procedure, to get new bonds after giving guarantee against deception. In the meantime the interest money would still be received by the owner of the bond because no statement of transfer of the bonds would be accepted by the treasury department if properly vouched for statements concerning loss had been made. Of course, it is not as easy to transfer registered bonds in cases of bona fide sales as it is with coupon bonds, as there is more or less formality, or red tape, as it is called, which one has to go through; but where bonds are brought for an investment there is less likelihood of transfer than there is when bonds are bought for speculation. And, as already pointed out, the danger of loss by theft or otherwise is practically eliminated if the bonds are registered. The advantages of registration far outweigh the disadvantages; and hereafter the purchasers of government bonds should take advantage of the system. It is one sure way to thwart the thieves.

LUMPING THE LEGISLATORS' SALARY.

The lump sum salary for legislators started from the idea that it was desirable on behalf of the state because the limited amount paid would have a tendency to restrict the length of the biennial terms, the argument being that the legislators would plan not to stay beyond the limit for which the stated amount would be fair compensation, whereas with a per diem stipend they might be apt to prolong their stay at Montpelier somewhat unnecessarily. It was argued that the expenses to the state might be cut to reasonable bounds thereby. But the theory does not reckon accurately with human nature. If the average legislatures are inclined to take their own head in the matter and reach final adjournment at leisure, it might probably be expected, too, that if the lump sum fixed did not seem to be commensurate with the volume of work they had to accomplish they would go a step further and summarily increase the lump sum. Then the state would be no better off than if it continued to pay a per diem stipend. Hence the system of paying a per diem for the length of stay in service may work out to better advantage after all if the legislatures are not too dilatory in their actions. There will not be great regret, therefore, that the House killed the measure recently for a lump sum salary for the members of the general assembly.

STATE POLICIES RECOMMENDED.

In First Report Submitted by Vermont Board of Control.

The Vermont state board of control has made the following recommendations in its first report:

1. That the legislature consider the advisability of installing a modern sprinkler system in the capital, in order to provide adequate protection in case of fire and to lower rates of insurance.
2. That the legislature, for like reasons, consider the matter of fire protection of all state institutions.
3. That the legislature consider the matter of insurance on state property. It is urged that the legislature determine whether or not the state should, by sinking fund or otherwise, provide its own insurance on all or part of state property.
4. That in the appropriations for and erection of new buildings at state institutions hereafter, due care should be exercised that such materials and architecture be selected as will best conform to future development of the institutions.
5. That the overhead expense of conducting the T. N. Vail agricultural school and farms is too great a burden on the state to warrant its continuance for the relatively small number of students available. The property is larger than is necessary for an agricultural school, and the problem of supervising the institution is greater than providing education for the number of students in attendance. In the near future, large replacement costs to meet depreciation will be required. Recommended that the incoming governor interview Mr. Vail in regard to the future policy of the school.
6. That the house of correction should be combined with the state prison at Windsor, to save large overhead expenses. The state prison is adequate to accommodate the present needs, as to size and in addition has a splendid farm and adequate facilities for working thereon prisoners not desired to be confined within the state prison.

WILLIAMSTOWN

F. D. Alger is making improvements on his farm and this week F. R. Edwards of Burlington is installing for Mr. Alger a Perfection milking machine to facilitate and save time.

William L. Henry, for some three years past holding a responsible position with the Curtiss Aeroplane company of Buffalo, N. Y., is now at home.

George H. Goodrich has rented his farm, stock and tools to his nephew, Leon Seaver, and the deal is to take effect at once. Mr. Goodrich's family is to continue to live on the farm and Mr. Seaver will board with them.

Miss Lena Thurber is taking care of Louisa Whitcomb at the home of Millie Drury and Mrs. Ida E. Whitcomb.

Walter Loo, who sold his farm, formerly owned by E. L. Tracy, so that he might join the navy, was in town for a visit to old friends yesterday.

People from Brookfield, Barre and Washington joined with townspeople in attending the dance given by the "Bachelor Girls" in grange hall last evening. Poor traveling probably lessened the number present. Many favorable comments were heard regarding the music, which was furnished by an orchestra of three pieces, composed of George L. Simons, W. J. Gilbertson and Miss Bessie Spear, the two last named from Barre. Perley Keyes of Brookfield acted as prompter and floor manager.

Mrs. W. F. Glover and children, Helen and Gordon, are spending a few days with H. C. Glover and family in Groton.

CURRENT COMMENT

Why They May Have Voted Yes.

"One may properly ask what's in a name when Saint Albans, Saint Johnsbury, and Saint George voted for rum."

Possibly these towns voted, not for rum, but simply to let it be known that the destruction of the local option principle and the invasion of state rights did not meet with their approval.—St. Albans Messenger.

Gillett's Election a Symptom.

The election of F. H. Gillett of Massachusetts as speaker of the House is the selection of a choice representative Republican to that position and it indicates also the determination of the ruling party to put forward as its representative men those who are forward-minded and who stand for progress. Mr. Mann, who stood for the backward-looking element, was at first supposed to be sure of the position. Possibly he would have been chosen if the election of speaker had followed close on the election of members.

However, when it dawned on the American public, and especially on the Republicans who think more of the future than of the past, that this might happen, there was such an outbreak of sentiment against the scheme that it was killed by public opinion. Mann was admittedly pro-German, and whatever Chicago or a few other centers may say, that will not go down with the average American. He was reactionary and was backed by that monument of reaction, old "Joe" Cannon, a genial old gentleman, whom they all call "Uncle Joe" and delight to honor as an individual, but do not care to follow in the year 1919.

Gillett is a gentleman of high personal character, independent and intelligent, and he will, of course, make a speaker of ability and fairness. But the best of it is that he will be accepted as the sort of man whom the Republican party chooses as its representative.—Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

MONTPELIER

In Montpelier city court a plea of not guilty was entered in the case of State vs. W. O. Lowe, charged with selling mortgaged property. This is one of the three cases which are pending. Lowe was in court some time since and bail fixed but this has not been furnished and Lowe went to jail. Bail in other cases has also been fixed. A hearing will take place later in the matter.

The will of Rachel T. Johannott was presented Monday for probate, John A. Hutchinson, through his attorney, E. M. Harvey, has settled his account in probate court of the estate of Ella Bannister, late of Roxbury. J. W. Carver has settled his final account as trustee of the estate of Oliver J. L. Matthews, late of Barre City. He settled his account as administrator some time since but as trustee had to wait until the widow and two children were located in France, which has occurred.

The following participated in the dinner given by Governor Clement at his home Monday evening to General Edwards: Governor Clement, General H. T. Johnson, Major Chandler, Mayor H. C. Shurtleff, Captain H. D. Sheldon, James B. Estee, Mayor Glysson of Barre, J. G. Brown, Horace Brown, James Mackay of Barre and Speaker C. S. Dana.
