Hanson of Montpelier, Dr. Hanson announces that the present occupant still holds the lease. The much needed sheathing which held up the work, examinations at the police station for the past week and a half has been obtained. This morning the station presented an appearance of great activity, with the carpenters working to finish the job as soon as possible. An official notice was received from Washington yesterday by George N. Tilden, manager of the local U. S. employment service, stating that it was necessary to suspend the service owing to a lack of funds to prosecute the work further. Should the next Congress vote money enough to carry on the work the 700 offices which are affected by this act throughout the country would be reopened and the employees reinstated in their positions, providing they so desired. A skeleton organization will be retained so that these offices may be reopened with the least difficulty possible. In Vermont there are five places containing one of these government agencies, Bellows Falls, Barre, Burlington, St. Johnsbury and Rutland. Since the installation of the office in this city the bureau has proven effective in securing positions for both discharged soldiers and sailors, to say nothing of the hundreds of civilians who have profited by the long-reaching arms of the service.

RED + NOTES

Food and clothes! Just the bare necessities for keeping the flame of life alive in the human body. That is the appeal of more than 1,000,000 people in northern France and Belgium. Most of them are refugees—the people who were unfortunate enough to have settled in the regions of Europe which were overrun by the invading army of Germany. They were no more to blame for their misfortunes than were the comfortable citizens of Kansas or Pennsylvania, or even Vermont. Yet they suffered untold miseries in this world upheaval. They do not make their appeal on
