MAY BLOCKADE RUSSIAN PORTS

Allies' Council of Five Discussed the Situation: Americans in Doubt

LATTER AWAIT WORD FROM WASHINGTON

Most of Black Sea Ports Could Be Blocked By Denikine Government

Paris, Tuesday, July 15 (By the Associated Press).—The council of five met today to discuss the Russian blockade. There have been proposals that the powers shall allow ships to enter Russian ports under special permits, the United States having constantly insisted there has been no blockade against Russia except such as is incidental to the embargo on imports to Germany. Consequently, the American delegates were not ready to take any action in the matter until instructions have been received from Washington. It is suggested that most of the Black sea ports could be blocked by the Denikine government, which is friendly to the allies, but the supreme council has not decided to ask Denikine to declare such a blockade.

AID FROM EVERY SIDE. Everybody Wants the Disabled Soldiers to Make Good.

Washington, D. C., July 16.—Educational institutions have altered their course to suit the desires of disabled soldiers applying for entrance. Non-collegiate courses are being offered, in order to meet the requirements of students without sufficient preparation for work of regular college grade. Ex-ize new subjects have been introduced into the curriculum. One state college is providing training for camp cooks which in that particular locality offers good openings, as the demand is large and the pay good. State legislatures have made appropriations sufficiently large to cover all expenses of tuition and other fees of disabled service men. Employers advertise for the services of discharged disabled men, not with the idea of exploitation, but because of their enlarged vision and broader experiences gained through their service—makes them satisfactory employees. Workers in the various industrial and commercial establishments in which disabled men have been placed have almost universally welcomed the opportunity of assisting them by kindness and consideration in their efforts to retain and re-establish themselves in the work they have undertaken, as self-reliant, independent, self-respecting American citizens.

GERMAN PRICES FALL IN CRASH

As Illicit Dealers Bring Out Huge Concealed Stocks IN VIRTUAL PANIC TO UNLOAD THEM

Lifting of Blockade Brings in Element of Strong Competition

Berlin, Tuesday, July 15 (By the Associated Press).—Prices on all foodstuffs have fallen with a crash in Berlin as a result of the lifting of the blockade. Illicit dealers with huge concealed stocks brought them out in a virtual panic to unload before competing supplies entered Germany. Tons of provisions are being shipped in from occupied territories while everywhere in the city great stores of coffee, cocoa, butter, sausages and other supplies have made their appearance.

Afoot Alone. I walk to my work when the weather is fair, For I can't spare the price that they ask for a car. And also I find that in taking the air As I take it, afoot, is a cure for one's care. And causes one's fancies to wander afar. So I walk to my work, having nothing to pay, And am cheered by the wonders I see on the way.

This morning my barber, a pale little man, Swished hastily past me; he drives a sedan. On the boulevard yesterday, down by the river, I was passed by our scrub lady driving a fiver. The plumber, the druggist and grocery clerk Drives chummies or roadsters while going to work.

The down is still soft on our office boy's cheek, But he purchased a car—at a bargain last week; And I've just heard the junior book-keeper inquire Where the janitor was when he blew out his tire; Our typist appears to be troubled, alas! Because of the price they are charging for gas.

The men who sell turnips and milk and cigars And neckties and sausage all have their own cars; The cobbler who fixed the old shoes I am wearing, Rides forth in his car when he wishes an airing. When the girl at the switchboard is peevish, I know That a blowout or puncture is making her so.

I walk to my work when the mornings are fine, For I can't pay the price to be riding in style; The cars hurry past, a continuous line, But often fair fancies and pleasing are mine, Such fancies as shorten the merriest mile. So I walk to the work that's to gladden my day, And am cheered by the things that I see on the way. —S. E. Kiser, in Saturday Evening Post.

MARKETING FOR WIVES.

Queer Marriage Customs That Prevail Among Indian Tribes.

The Azandi, a tribe living in the northeast of the Belgian Congo, sell wives amazingly cheap. There is no need for the intending bridegroom to wait months before he can pluck up courage to "pop the question." A knife, costing about 75 cents, will procure him a life's partner. Another "marriage market" thrives in the mountainous district of the Mafalees, in New Guinea. The price of each girl is one pig, augmented with dogs' teeth necklaces, and so on, according to the wealth of the girl's parents. The proposal is usually made by proxy, the boy sending a female relative to the lady of his choice.

The preliminaries to courtship among the Mafalees are rather picturesque. When a young man, wishing to marry, goes out to seek his "ojande" (literally, his flower), he will light a fire on a still day in a bush or in an open space outside his village and wait till a slight breeze carries the flame or smoke in one direction or another. He then takes that point of the compass as an indication and walks to the next village to find his "flower."

The Santali Indians must literally purchase their brides. They pay a sum of money to the girl's parents—usually about 100 rupees—and, in addition, they present the mother and the female relatives with new saris or shawls.

Should the bridegroom choose a widow for his wife, she will only cost half the sum mentioned. The reason why the Santali Indians hold widows in less regard than unmarried females is because they assert that in the next world man and wife are reunited, hence a widow who marries again is only "lent" to her second husband. When a young man courts a girl who does not favor his suit, he adopts an eccentric way to cure her stubbornness. After having dipped his finger in red paint, he goes in search of the lady and imprints his mark on her forehead. He may claim her as his wife.

And nice soft rocks for seats, While ants and bugs of species unknown Danced foot-trot over the cats! The water is mixed with leaves and twigs, Pine needles are in the food; But somehow or other, there's never a time When everything tastes so good. —Brattleboro Reformer.
