It seems too bad if we must wait till the Northfield fair before getting a rain storm.

The Hungarians who prefer democratic government ought to search Archduke Joseph for concealed weapons. Not be too credulous.

With only two arrests for intoxication during the month of July, Barre is undoubtedly feeling the wave of change which is sweeping all over the country.

Will Burt Leonard of Somerset come up to the Vermont legislature next year? If so, who will be left in the 15,080 acres to carry on the town's official business? Oh, the women—of course, the women.

The old C. V. trundles right along but it is handicapped by its neighbors who fail to reach the trying point at the appointed hour. For example, that is why you do not get your evening mail until the morning after.

Sunday golf in Massachusetts is up against the bunker with a vengeance, with the state's prosecuting machinery in operation against the playing of the game on the first day of the week. To be impartial, Sunday baseball ought to be stopped, too.

Twelve tons of army bacon were sold in five hours at Hartford, Conn., the other day, the stores charging just two cents above the government cost in order to cover freight and distribution. It begins to look like old times. We neglected to say that the total price was 36 cents per pound.

United States "regulars" are getting some of the home-coming recognition which their services in Europe demand. The gratitude and appreciation of the American people didn't run out with the arrival home of the troops which formerly constituted the National Guard and with the draft units. There is full enthusiasm for all of the men who did so well in defending their country and the allied cause.

Some way or other, Senator Lodge's criticism of the treaty of peace and the accompanying league of nations covenant seems to have been tempered considerably, as indicated by his address in the Senate on Tuesday. Perhaps it is not too much to expect that the warring factions over the ratification of the league will be able to get together on an agreement that will not halt the movement toward world peace.

Lest the automobile tourists get the notion that the so-called Ethan Allen trail between Burlington and the White mountains, via Cambridge, Morrisville, Hardwick and St. Johnsbury, is the only road between the two points mentioned, the parties interested in Barre and Montpelier ought to get together and mark the trail by way of Montpelier, Barre, Groton and Wells River, one of the best routes anywhere in the state, and over one of the most scenic routes. It might be well, too, to mark a route from Rutland across the Green mountains to Barre, thence to the White mountains, which also is a splendid route for automobile traffic. The way to proceed is to invent a name and then paint the posts along the route. The suggestion is advanced to the parties directly concerned.

VERMONT SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

What temporary setback the Vermont savings banks may have received as the result of the demands made by the United States government on the people for war loans has been more than offset by the marked acceleration in the inflow of deposits now that the government's requests have stopped. For illustration, the savings deposits in the 68 savings banks of the state showed a gain of more than three millions of dollars in the two months and a half period from April 15 to June 30 of this year. It is evident from those statistics that the spirit of thrift is so deep-seated in Vermonters that the people cannot be shaken out of the steady habit of saving by such distracting influences as five Liberty loans and sporadic investment in war savings stamps; in fact, the idea of solid investment which they gained through placing their money in government securities seems to have developed the desire to save money all the time by placing money in the savings banks. There are no statistics available at the present time on which to base such an assertion, but it would not be at all surprising if the number of savings accounts had taken a marked increase by reason of the lesson of savings for government needs.

Henry Ford

One of the hardest fought libel suits in the history of the United States courts is now drawing to an end in a little town on the outskirts of the city of Detroit.

Eminent counsel, hundreds of witnesses, newspaper men and a curious public add lustre to a scene already notable from the personnel of the principal litigants.

The Chicago Tribune alleged that Henry Ford was an "ignorant idealist and an anarchist" and whether this allegation is true or not will depend on the judgment of the jury. However, we know that he learned early in life the great lesson of saving, and, further, he learned what is of far greater importance, the obligation which he held to society to use these savings for the benefit of mankind.

He may have been sadly lacking in some of the elements of culture, but, after all, are we not too apt to accept education as the end, rather than the means to the end? and would it not be better to judge him by his deeds, rather than his words?

Henry Ford made money because he saved his money to use wisely. Every young man has an equal opportunity to-day, but he must first get the habit of saving. Saving will develop the habit of safe investing. Open an account to-day.

SOUTH RANDOLPH

Automobiles Met at Dix Camp Bridge and One Was Smashed.
 Two cars met at the Dix Camp bridge Sunday. The car going north turned over a little too far and landed in a tree just south of the bridge. If it had not been for the tree the car would have gone into the river and there would probably have been a serious, if not fatal accident. The car going south did not stop where the accident occurred, stopping five miles below at Camp's garage and said a car had gone off the bank at a bridge north of East Randolph and advised that a car with tackle blocks, etc., be sent to their rescue. E. B. Camp loaded into a car his wrecking outfit and went to the place of the accident and found the car was some broken up; windshield was broken and some other damages, but not enough to prevent the car continuing its journey. They took measurements and said the town of Randolph would hear from them later for damages. No one took the number of the car going south at the place of accident or at Camp's garage.
