CLEAN-UP CAMPAIGN ON W. S. S. PURCHASE

Was Held at Waterbury Yesterday with Good Attendance, Most of Towns of Two Counties Being Present.

Waterbury, Aug. 30.—A clean-up meeting of the war savings work in Washington and Orange counties was held at the Waterbury inn yesterday afternoon, with a good attendance, most of the towns being represented and with many women from various clubs in the two counties being present, and an especially large attendance from Montpelier, Barre and this place.

Miss Lena E. Hamilton, state publicity director for Vermont, was not present, as she was representing the state manager, Mrs. D. C. Jones, in Boston. The speaker of the afternoon was Mrs. Myra B. Lord of Boston, district director of the bureau of women's organizations.

"The more than one hundred thousand members of the war savings societies in New England will participate actively in the national campaign to reduce the high cost of living," said Mrs. Lord. "Women's organizations are probably one of the most practicable channels through which to work in helping the department of justice in its campaign to reduce the cost of living. As the federal administration discovered upon investigation that 90 per cent of the consumption of food passes through the hands of women, it is felt that a very practical thing could be done by the women in the application of the principles of intelligent buying, which is one of the chief planks of the campaign.

"The food commissioners in the New England states are to confer in the near future on definite plans for action, but in the meantime the women's organizations can aid materially by urging upon their members the necessity for wise spending of the personal or family income; in other words, buying only what is really needed and buying that to the best advantage. Careful buying and wise use without waste will make a normal demand for goods, and a normal supply will bring prices down to a reasonable level.

"The increased cost of living can be met only by decreasing consumption or increasing production. If by concerted action the women of New England decrease the consumption of luxuries and thus increase the production of necessities, it will be only a short time before the benefits will be felt.

"Another way in which it is hoped to do something in this direction is through the home economics bureau, of which Miss Agnes Donham is director. The bureau stands ready to supply speakers on home economics, assistance in budget making, in wise expenditure for food and clothing, so that the woman with a family to feed and clothes may have practical help in getting the best possible value for the amount of money she has to spend.

"Particularly in the industrial centers is this kind of help needed, and it is doubly a patriotic service at this time for regular saving and careful buying, to lend a helping hand to the women who because they are uninformed are wasting what should mean comfort for the whole family.

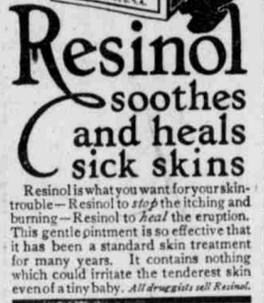

"The salvage bureau, with Mrs. H. Parker Whittington as director, is also rendering valuable service in encouraging women to rid their homes of everything that is not useful or beautiful; not to waste material by burning or otherwise destroying it, but by turning it back into the market through the junk dealer, not only decrease the cost of production but save the raw material that is so much needed for the goods required by Europe. Salvage has been taken up by many women's organizations as a means of raising funds for their treasuries, and school children find in it an easy way to earn money for the thrift stamps through which they are learning the value of saving—of creating capital for future enterprises.

"The chief obstacle in the way of the industrial worker to-day is that the relative sense of values has become demoralized. Largely increased wages mean to them simply the opportunity to purchase luxuries even at extravagant prices, with the result that there is no more left in the pay envelope with which to provide necessities than there was in the days when prices were at a normal level. Too many times instead of saving from his earnings this situation results in the sale of the Liberty bonds and savings stamps for which they sacrificed during the war as a patriotic measure, and so the wage earner is doubly harmed. He must learn that the $10 for a six-hour day is no benefit to him—that we are not a whit better off—if the price of bread, shoes, clothing, rent, fuel, has increased in the same proportion.

"If we who have seen the vision," said Mrs. Lord, "who can foresee the inevitable result of this abnormal inflation of currency and values, will use our influence to stem this tide of extravagant living and by precept and example encourage every member of the community to save a part of their earnings regularly and spend the remainder wisely, we can do much not only to reduce the high cost of living, but to restore living itself to normal conditions.

"It is not required that we return to the extreme economy and sacrifice which the pressure of the war demanded, but we can all contribute to the common good by saving regularly, spending wisely, and living sanely."
