VERMONT IN CONGRESS.
Already people are figuring upon the effects of the census of 1920 on the House of Representatives in Congress. The membership of the House at present is 434 and it is predicted that if the same ratio of representation is maintained after the next census the membership will be increased to approximately 500.

Cedar Tree Over 2,000 Years Old.
A district logging engineer with headquarters at Missoula, Mont., reports that he has seen cedar trees more than 2,000 years old still alive and growing in the Kaniku forest, which is in the extreme northeastern corner of Washington. "These trees," says the engineer, "varied in size from a foot to ten feet in diameter. I used a boring instrument on them and found that the trees were in all cases 2,000 years old, and some of them nearly 3,000. The wood is firm and is a potential source of the high-grade timber. I know of no place in the United States except in the Redwood forest, where trees of that age may be found."—Exchange.

Some of Congressman Porter H. Dale's friends are asking what their attitude should be in case a third party—say Allen M. Fletcher of Cavendish—emerged in the race with Senator Dillingham and Judge Wendell P. Stafford in a contest for the United States senatorship.

WASHINGTON
Considering the fact that the 1920 census is quite likely to show figures that will deprive Vermont of one of its congressional districts, why, they ask, shouldn't Mr. Dale enter such a free-for-all?

The controversy relative to United States Consular Agent Jenkins at Puebla, Mex., has changed since he first came into public notice by reason of his abduction by bandits. At that time the Mexican government had given him the reasonable protection to which under international law representatives of foreign nations are entitled. Now he is in prison accused of crime in that he connived with the outlaws for the purpose of compelling the payment to them of a huge ransom, which they in turn were to use in promoting rebellion.

RANDOLPH
Conditions in Mexico are such that statements even from official sources must be received with caution, but if there is any color of evidence to sustain the charge lodged against Jenkins the response of the United States government to Secretary Lansing's demand for the release of the prisoner is precisely what ours would be in like circumstances.

RANDOLPH
While in common practice the measures resorted to south of the Rio Grande to enforce order and administer justice do not resemble those in the United States, the system, more honored in the breach than in the observance, is much the same. Jenkins is in the custody of the courts, and there, as here, the executive and the judicial departments operate in different spheres. Moreover, jurisdiction in this case has been taken by a state, bringing about a complication familiar enough in our history but not easily understood in other countries.

RANDOLPH
The administration at Washington should make every effort to arrive at the facts of this troublesome case. Jenkins does not appear to be in danger, and, guilty or innocent, the truth will hurt nobody except politicians and predatory interests which, as usual, are war-dancing.—New York World.

RANDOLPH
Political Speculation.
Some of Congressman Porter H. Dale's friends are asking what their attitude should be in case a third party—say Allen M. Fletcher of Cavendish—emerged in the race with Senator Dillingham and Judge Wendell P. Stafford in a contest for the United States senatorship.

RANDOLPH
Considering the fact that the 1920 census is quite likely to show figures that will deprive Vermont of one of its congressional districts, why, they ask, shouldn't Mr. Dale enter such a free-for-all?

RANDOLPH
Certainly a Dillingham-Stafford-Fletcher-Dale contest would be apt to develop some spectacular and novel features, but the chief feature of this probably purely hypothetical situation is that there seems to be nothing in any one's mind about Congressman Greene's ability to hold, not only his own district, but if necessary to bestride the whole state if it is all pooled in one district by the gerrymander of the census.

RANDOLPH
Incidentally, one congressman and two senators would be about as pointed a comment on the peculiarity of the senatorial system as one could find in many a day.

RANDOLPH
Possibly Congress may see some way of once more tidying over this awkward contingency, but meanwhile it is perfectly clear and plain what Vermont must be prepared for.—Rutland Herald.
