The barber shop that for many years has been known as the Miers uptown shop, located in one of the basement apartments of the French block on the street, yesterday became the property of Guy Blakely and Ernest Lafayette of this city.

"No trouble at all, madam," said the manager, handing another glass.

Those in the office worked until late last evening in figuring out who obtained the contracts, but they were unable to finish them. Shortly after they stopped work, the electric wire broke near the State House, so that the building was in darkness for some time and the night watchman had to go about the building with a lantern.

Edward Daley, the man whom Governor Clement recently pardoned and who, according to the verdict returned in Chittenden county court, ran into and killed a girl in Burlington last week, was appointed to the secretary of state's office last week in an effort to license an automobile. This did not develop, and this, with the fact that the man to whom he rented his plant had left, caused him to return to his former vocation.

He was not feeling very well when he came to the city and, after going to a drug store, went to the G. E. Hall to rest. While there he was taken seriously ill. He went to the sink in the kitchen of the rooms, but apparently fell while there. He recovered enough so that he was able to get to the couch in the hall, where he was found Monday by John Farwell, a comrade and member of the post. Dr. F. W. Harriman was called, and he moved the man to the hospital for care and treatment.

Marshall Reed, who has been visiting relatives in Brattleboro, has returned home.

So bless the front porch—sanctuary of neighborliness and friendship; altar of much that is sweet in family life; show-place for our best qualities.—Kitchener Telegraph.

The well-known function of the front porch as a courting place requires no extended remarks. But the porch has never been given the credit that is due it as a great forum upon which neighbors get together in the cool of a summer's evening and exchange notes about the weather.

Ground Was There All Right. One of Dixon's greatest failings is his absent-mindedness. The other morning he came out of his house, walked to the edge of the pavement, and suddenly threw his right leg into the air with a vaulting movement. Of course, he fell sprawling to the ground.

"Hello, Dixon. What are you doing?" cried a neighbor, who rushed to help him.

Dixon rose to his feet and brushed the dust from his clothing.

"Oh, nothing," he muttered sheepishly. "Only thought I was mounting my bicycle. I forgot I hadn't the healthiest thing with me."—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

"Cow" a Bit Too Alcoholic. Because the "cow" in the saloon of William Judge, in San Francisco, was "lifted" once too often, three men are in jail, charged with selling liquor in the face of Uncle Sam. The "cow" is part of a pastoral painting which hangs on the saloon wall. Policeman Albert Seaman and Internal Revenue Officers Holtney, Adams and Shurtleff entered the place. They had been making observations for several days and they wanted to interview the "cow." "Nice bossy," said Shurtleff, rapping three times on the picture frame. The picture swayed out from the wall, disclosing a hole through which protruded a hairy hand, holding a glass of "squirrel" whiskey. While his companions "detained" the hand, Shurtleff ran into a back room and fell upon William McNamee, a silent bartender to whom the hand belonged. Incidentally he gathered in reliable evidence. Judge, part proprietor and official bartender, attempted to depart at this juncture, and after a battle royal was nally induced to change his mind. The officers gathered in George Roff, the other part proprietor, and declared the
