Battleship Louisiana Coming up the Mississippi River.

New Orleans, Sept.—The United States Navy Department has announced that the Battleship Louisiana, the newest and biggest war vessel in the navy, will come to New Orleans about Dec. 1 to receive the $10,000 silver service given by the people of Louisiana, the value of which equals that of the Battleship New York, heretofore the most expensive in the navy. Considerable diversion was created during the past week by the statement supposed to emanate from the Bureau of Navigation that the passes at the mouth of the Mississippi River were too shallow to admit the Louisiana which draws 26 feet 3-4 inches, full loaded. As ocean-freight vessels drawing several feet more than the Louisiana and having 50 per cent. more length, pass in and out of the river almost daily, the story evoked a storm of indignation and the New Orleans Progressive Union wired Secretary of the Navy Bonaparte demanding an investigation. Congressman Davey of Louisiana was in Washington and a visit to the navy department resulted in a complete change of front, he being advised that the Louisiana would be sent about Dec. 1, that the naval board demanded by the Progressive Union to take soundings would be sent here meanwhile, while the Chief Engineer's Department of the War Department asserted there was ample water at the passes for the Louisiana. The river in front of New Orleans has a depth of nearly 200 feet and a fine harbor is afforded vessels of all sizes.

On numerous occasions when war vessels were wanted here for special features, reports have cropped out of Washington calculated to inspire fear that such vessels might be damaged. It was decided to settle the matter finally, hence the board of inquiry was demanded. The largest floating steel dry dock in the world, except the Dewey at Manila, is located opposite the United States Naval Station at New Orleans and the government has thrown it open to the use of all vessels, many of which make the Louisiana seem small in comparison.

BRYAN RECALLS A "LINE."

William J. Bryan and his wife and daughter will never again order fresh peaches while in Paris. One of the acrostable stories at the dinner for Mr. Bryan on Saturday night at Healy's restaurant was as follows:

Mutual friends invited the Bryans to lunch at the Paris Hotel. The little girl, Grace, had become weary of the lettuce in going around, and when she learned that peaches were on the bill of fare she said she wanted some. The waiter was asked about the peaches, and he said that he had some nice ones, just from Algiers, and he would be delighted to get them for Mlle Bryan. He got them. They came in a small wooden box, about a dozen in all, and were small and inferior in every way to the glorious products of the Delaware, Georgia and California orchards, but they were peaches, and the best to be obtained in Paris.

When the waiter presented his check

there was an explosion. The bill for the peaches was $7.20 in American money. The American host of the Bryans, who had ordered the dinner, did not try to restrain his feelings. He "roared" the waiter, the restaurant, the peaches, and the Algerian who grew the little peaches. The proprietor explained that peaches were a rarity in Paris, and that importing them from Algiers was a costly undertaking. He called them beautiful peaches, a characterization that nearly caused the American to hit him, but he made the Bryan party pay the $7.20 for the peaches.

"When I saw the bill for the peaches," said Mr. Bryan, "I was reminded of that line in 'Blingon on the Rhine,' which we used to speak at school. It went: 'A soldier of the legion lay dying in Algiers.' I suspect he ate one of those miserable Algerian peaches, costing 70 cents."

Postmaster Robbed

G. W. Fouts, Postmaster at Riverton, Ia., nearly lost his life and was robbed of all comfort, according to his letter, which says: "For 20 years I had chronic liver complaint, which led to such a severe case of jaundice that even my finger nails turned yellow; when my doctor proscribed Electric Bitters; which cured me and have kept me well for eleven years." Sure cure for Biliousness, Neuralgia, Weakness and all Stomach, Liver, Kidney and Bladder derangement. A wonderful Tonic. At the Justus Pharmacy, 50 cents.

Mr Shipman's Report.

Assistant Commissioner M. L. Shipman, of the Bureau of Labor and Printing, who has been out in the state collecting mill statistics for several days, has returned to the city. When asked for a statement concerning his trip, Mr. Shipman said he had nothing of special interest to report; that conditions touching industrial interests were about the same everywhere this year. He finds a material increase in the number of cotton, woolen and hosiery mills, furniture factories and miscellaneous plants. The points made by Mr. Shipman the past week are situated upon the Carolina and North Western Railroad, between Gastonia and Lenoir. He says there is a noticeable increase in the investments in all classes of manufactories and that both operators and operatives are apparently happy and contented. The continuous rains have tended to discourage farmers somewhat, but they are striving to make the best of the situation. Their products find a ready market at fair prices and little difficulty is experienced in the adjustment of personal obligations.—News & Observer.

"Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep."

By James Walker Heatherly.

Lying on my bed tonight,
Thro' the window pane I see,
The stars of Heaven twinkling bright,
And my childhood prayer returns to me.
"Now I lay me down to sleep,"
And may never again awake,
My soul cries out within me deep,
Save my soul for Jesus sake.

Lying on my bed tonight,
Gazing at the far away,
A future existence looms up bright,
And for immortality I pray.
For everlasting life so sweet,
My Saviour's hand I long to shake,
Humbly to bow at Jesus' feet,
If I should die before I wake.

Lying on my bed tonight,
As I pray my soul takes hope;
A future existence looms up bright,
And the very gates of Heaven ope.
All my doubts are cleared away,
And I know religions not a fake,
Save my soul dear Lord I pray,
If I should die before I wake.

Lying on my bed tonight,
Gazing at the worlds afar,
A future existence looms up bright,
A life to soothe the souls desire,
Life eternal great reward.
The morning's dawn may never break,
Remember me, saye me dear Lord,
If I should die before I wake.
