Rudolf Carl von Slatin, Austrian Friend of Great Britain, Unique Figure

(By Associated Press.) Stockholm, Sweden, Oct. 11.—There came to Stockholm a little while ago one of the distinctly unique personalities of the great world war—Rudolf Carl von Slatin, the Austrian friend of Great Britain, a man who had lived by the sword almost from boyhood, but who in the sudden turn of events in 1914 found himself not a man without a country, but a man with two countries—two countries arrayed against each other in the interest of all world combats.

tion of the American embassy at Petrograd. Slatin, who devoted his life to militarism, speaks now of war on the standpoint of humanity. "I would like so much to be able to say when it is all over that I had done something to help the sufferers in this tremendous war," he said somewhat wistfully to a correspondent of the Associated Press.

When the parting of the ways came in 1914 Slatin found his love for Austria was still strong although much of his life had been devoted to Britain and her wards in Egypt. He had become essentially a part of the English military machine. But he could not fight against his fatherland, nor could he serve in any way against the country which had meant so much to him and which had lavished honors upon him.
