Elections Too Frequent
Philadelphia Evening Ledger.
Every time there is a presidential campaign the wisdom of a single term of six years becomes more apparent. For four months every four years business and everything else is tied up while the politicians take possession of the stage. That does not make for efficiency, nor does it necessarily improve our statesmanship. Or, rather, government means something more than the mere preservation of peace in the streets, and our presidential campaigns can scarcely be considered as making for that kind of order and stability which is requisite in a nation of our importance and size.
