Many Will Enjoy Booth Tarkington's Comedy, "Clarence"
Plays may come and plays may go like the waters of Tennyson's brook, but only now and then comes along one with the tonic quality which makes the expenditure of time and money worth while. The new comedy "Clarence," by Booth Tarkington, would seem to have the edge on both these risks. The first is the play, the creation of one of the foremost writers of our time. The second is that it was produced by George C. Tyler, known to theatre patrons all over the nation as the man who has brought numerous sterling successes to the stage. And the third is that "Clarence" comes bearing the mark of strong approval of both New York and Chicago, and that identically the same company which has recently closed a long and prosperous run at the Burtis opera house, Chicago, will be seen in this city.
