Fired From the Window. "Miss Flagler had fired the shot from the second story window of the house, and, although she could not see through the foliage, she imagined that her shot had probably taken effect. It required but a slight investigation to prove what had really occurred. The boy was on the ground teneath the tree and very near the fence, with a hole through his body. Blood was flowing freely from the wound and before he could be carried into Gen. Flagler's house by neighbors there was a large pool the fluid on the ground near where he had fallen. The boy, however, never spoke after he was shot. A telephone message sent to the po-lice station brought the patrol wagon to Gen. Flagler's house. Police Sur-geon Cannon was in the wagon and a quick trip was made to the house, but the wounded boy had passed to the life beyond and the doctor's services

Miss Fingler at Headquarters. "Immediately after the shooting word was received by telephone at police headquarters that Miss Flagler was on her way to give herself into custody. Shortly after that she appeared at Maj. Moore's office, and was at once ushered into his private room. She was accompanied by Capt. Shamer of the ordnance deout of town. She remained in the office of the superintendent of police for a couple of hours, and all others but those who had business in connection with the case were rigidly excluded. Newspaper reporters were also kept out at Maj. Moore's orders, and later he said that she declined to say anything with reference to the affair. Miss Flagler gave her age to the police as 28. She is a very attractive-looking woman, and, of course moved in the highest society at the capital, both on account of her father's official position and her own personality. Maj. Moore stated to a Star reporter that Miss Flagler had not made any detailed statement and that he had not urged her to

A story told by Dr. G. W. Balfour in his book on "The Senile Heart" well deserves the double purpose of marking the practical process which scientific medicine has achieved within the past 50 years and of administering a much needed word of comfort and encouragement to those numerous workers who, as age approaches, begin to feel uncomfortable about the regions of the heart.
