The boom which Rock Island is receiving through its new court house and postoffice building is given attention in today's Chicago Times-Herald, with cuts of each structure. Bleuer's band is figuring on leasing Harper's theatre for the coming season and will probably engage it. The Salvationists may parade the thoroughfares and pound their drum on the Sabbath as well as any other day, and the city authorities have no right to interfere with them, holds Justice H. A. Weld, before whom the city sought to prosecute the organization for disregarding its ordinances. Justice Weld rendered his decision, withheld a few days, this morning, and dismissed the proceedings against Harvey Butler, the drummer boy. The statutory provisions contend that religious services are not to be interrupted so long as they do not harm the peace of the state, and the justice holds that the drum-beating is a part of the Salvation Army service, and therefore cannot be stopped by municipal authority as a public demonstration or procession, which the ordinances prohibit Sunday. This gives the army full sway. How Mayor Knox Views It. Mayor Knox is in somewhat of a quandary over the matter and is not disposed to state how he will move next until he gives it more thought. Peoria sent the smallest crowd known to have ever come from there on an excursion day—about two hundred people. The excursion was under the auspices of the Turners, who were bound for the Davenport Turners' annual celebration at Schuetzen park. Forgot the Time. A number of the Mendota and Kewanee people forgot the leaving time of their train and others became confused because there was more than one depot in the city. The consequence was that those people who got mixed up were obliged to remain here over night.
