PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

The Daily Short Story

MASQUERADERS.

"So my cousin is coming from Europe to fulfill the conditions of his father's will? Well, I don't think much of him, that's sure. Any man that will consent to marry a girl whom he has never seen for the sake of a little money is a contemptible wretch!" and here Miss Lillias Sefton stopped excitedly.

"But, Lillias," argued her cousin Marian, "be reasonable. Herbert Marston hasn't expressed the slightest intention of complying with his father's wishes—has said nothing at all about matrimony and has no need of the fortune left him conditionally."

"Well, that only shows him to be miserly," was the willful retort. "And the matter just settles itself down to this. I thought over this matter all last night and have hit upon a splendid plan, if you'll only consent to it. You know we have received permission to keep house down at the old homestead all by ourselves this summer. Well, no one there knows us, and won't you be Lillias and let me be your maid? If he can't love me in one position as well as another, I don't want anything to do with him."

Both these young girls were beautiful, wealthy and romantic. They were naturally taken with the plan, which, after a little coaxing, her cousin agreed to.

In a few weeks they were located for the summer in the Sefton homestead.

"Now," said Lillias one glorious summer evening, "I suppose we may be expecting Herbert Marston daily, as I have left a note, to be delivered to him immediately after his arrival, informing him of my whereabouts. But look, here come two strangers. Maybe one of them is he. Be on your guard."

She had no time to say more, for both had approached, and one spoke: "Is Miss Sefton residing here?"

Marian bowed composedly.

"That's my name, sir."

"Indeed," with extended hand. "Allow me, then, to introduce myself as Herbert Marston."

After the necessary greetings had been interchanged, the newcomer glanced inquiringly at the little, white robed figure standing modestly apart.

Marian bit her lip amusedly. Lillias didn't look at all like a maid, still her character must be kept, and in reply to his questioning gaze she said:

"Maggie, you may go in and help Mrs. Brown about tea. I presume your walk from the depot has given you an appetizing meal, and Marian in her turn looked as though desiring an introduction to Mr. Marston's companion.

"Perhaps," said that gentleman, with an odd expression, "before your maid attends to her part of the business she will show my valet the rooms I am to occupy."

The valet was a handsome, dark mustached six footer, whose every expression belied his position of servitor, but he had shouldered the valise and stood waiting for his guide to lead the way, so with a look which signified something more than mere wonder Maggie obeyed the imperative nod of her mistress and proceeded up stairs.

"Phew!" said the valet after depositing his burden, looking up with a smile.

"That's what I call warm work. Well, Maggie, are you and I going to be friends?"

He spoke rather condescendingly, and the indignant blood rushed into his companion's cheeks as she replied coolly:

"I am nothing of a provoker, but therefore find it impossible to answer your question decidedly, but I am inclined to think not."

"That's bad. But our opinions on that subject differ. Why, if we don't entertain each other what the dickens shall we do with ourselves?"

"I have never been at a loss for amusement," responded his companion demurely.

"However, if you are dependent upon outside society there are plenty of elegant girls about whom I have no doubt you can readily become acquainted with."

"I don't fancy 'servant' as a general thing," he answered calmly. "I have rather high ideas for a valet and consequently have but little desire to 'become acquainted' with 'your friends.'"

"That man," she murmured softly, "is no more a servant than I am. But he shan't know that I suspect the truth." And she chuckled amusedly at the thought of her own secret, which he was far from divining.

After tea, while the master and mistress chatted pleasantly on the old fashioned porch the two servants by the gate were sparring away gaily.

"Why, Maggie," said the valet, who answered to the name of John, "you are twice as smart as half the young ladies of the present day. What makes you stay in so degrading a position? Don't you know enough to teach school?"

"Yes, I suppose so," replied Maggie, with a mischievous smile he failed to detect. She had been purposely "showing off."

"But I'm very much attached to Miss Lillias, and as long as one is obliged to work what does it matter what one does?"

"A good deal," he answered much more excitedly than the circumstances would seem to indicate. Everything went on merrily until the night before their departure, when visible sadness overshadowed the whole company.

John drew Maggie down by the gate. They had become very good friends notwithstanding Maggie's ideas upon their first meeting.

John cast a quick glance into her downcast face and then, as though encouraged by what he saw, went on impetuously:

"You must know what to say—must feel that I love you better than any one else in this wide world. And won't you tell me whether or not you can ever return my affection?"

Maggie did not answer in words, but her shy little smile spoke, and with a glad smile he took her close to his heart. Explanations followed. Herbert was playing the same game as Lillias. There was a double wedding.—Philadelphia Item.

His Humps.
They were newly married and were calling upon one of the friends of the bride who had been particularly pleasant upon the occasion of their wedding. The bridegroom, apropos of nothing, began to talk about phrenology and told how his wife had discovered two very prominent bumps on the back of his head. He was proud of them. So was she, and she passed him around that the host and hostess might feel the bumps and know of their existence. Then she explained:

"My book on phrenology says that they mean good memory and generosity."

It was evident that she was proud of the facts, and so was he. But the host, being of an inquiring turn of mind, wished to satisfy himself, so he got down a phrenological work from one of his library shelves and after much labor found the bumps on the chart. Turning to the notes, he read, seriously at first, then unsteadily. The bride became suspicious, but she was game and said:

"Read it out loud. Please do!" And the host read:

"These bumps are most frequently found on cats and monkeys."

Other topics consumed the remainder of the visit, which was brief.—New York Sun.

Swells With Swell Chests.
"I had occasion to examine two brothers who had applied for policies in our company the other day," said the medical examiner of a life insurance company. "One was 55 years old and the other was 53. They are both unmarried and are known about town as pretty gay boys. Usually there is considerable attached to writing policies for men who are known as 'rounders,' but these two proved to be perfect specimens of physical manhood."

"I was particularly impressed by their chest developments. They both had the same measurement and also the same expansion—from 39 to 43. When I found that they had smoked cigarettes from boyhood, I wondered all the more at the four inch expansion. Then they told me that when they were youngsters they used to delight in seeing how long they could hold their breath under water. Every time they took a bath in the tub one would take a deep breath, duck under, and the other would time him with a watch. A minute and a half, I believe, was the limit of their endurance. They said it was all their mother could do to get them out of the bath and drive them to bed."—Philadelphia Record.

Origin of the Word 'Sterling.'
The origin of the word "sterling" is very curious. Among the early miners of coin in northern Europe were the dwellers of eastern Germany. They were so skillful in their calling that numbers of them were invited to England to manufacture the metal money of the kingdom. The strangers were known as "sterlings." After a time the word became "sterling" and in this abbreviated form it has come to imply what is genuine in money, plate or character.

LULLABY.

We've wandered all about the upland fells,
But now good night, goodly to soaring swallows,
Now good night, goodly, dear day.

Fenny heads are closing fast, pigeons circle home at last;
Sleep, liechen, sleep, the bats are calling;
Pansies never miss the light, but sweet babes must sleep at night;
Sleep, liechen, sleep, the dew is falling.

Even wind among the quiet willows
Rests, and the sea is silent too.
See soft white linen, cool, such cool white pillows
Wait in the darkling room for you.

All the little chicks are still; now the moon peeps down the hill;
Sleep, liechen, sleep, the owls are hooting;
Ships have burg their lanterns out; little mice dare creep about;
Sleep, liechen, sleep, the stars are shooting.

1,000,000 WOMEN RELIEVED

Reports received show that Wine of Cardui has brought permanent relief to 1,000,000 suffering women in the last few years. Because of Wine of Cardui, thousands of sufferers, seemingly on the way to premature graves, are now healthy women taking an active interest in the duties of life. Mrs. Mitchell was declining in health when Wine of Cardui "performed a miraculous cure" in her case. She suffered terribly with the agonies of falling of the womb, leucorrhoea and profuse menstruation. The weekly appearance of the menses for two months sapped her vitality until she was little better than a physical wreck. Her nervous system gave way under the terrible pain and aggravation. Then came the trial of Wine of Cardui and the cure. Mrs. Mitchell's experience ought to command Wine of Cardui to suffering women in words of burning eloquence. The Wine is within the reach of all. Woman who try it are relieved. You can get as much benefit as Mrs. Mitchell received. Ask your druggist for Wine of Cardui. Send to the laboratory for the medicine if he tenders you a substitute.

WINE OF CARDUI

South Gaston, N. C., May 29, 1899.

Wine of Cardui and Theodor's Black-Draught have performed a miraculous cure in my case. I have been a great sufferer from falling of the womb and leucorrhoea, and my menses came every week for two months and became very painful. I was in a bad condition. My husband induced me to try Wine of Cardui and Black-Draught, and now I have no pain. The leucorrhoea has disappeared and now I am in perfect health. Mrs. WILLIE MITCHELL.
