LATE ARBOR DAY.

In Many States Annual Tree Planting Should Be Earlier.

It is well to defer gardens until the frost has left the ground and the days are long, but tree planting time or Arbor day has been set altogether too late in many states. A tree that is uprooted after the sap is well started and the leaves beginning to unfurl receive a nervous shock. It is likely, too, that the roots are wounded in transplanting and it has to begin life all over again in order to adjust itself to conditions. The rulings of habit are strong. Thus because we are accustomed to give presents at Christmas and to dye eggs at Easter schools and clubs decide that trees must be planted on Arbor day, if at all. In Illinois the first Arbor day was appointed at a season when it was supposed that it would be pleasant to be out of doors and every one could enjoy the budding foliage. In mid-April planting enthusiasm runs high, but for the welfare of trees it is rather late to do much transplanting. However, this fact should not discourage those who have laid plans, but another year matters may be arranged along other lines. At several recent meetings of forestry committees of the women's clubs it was suggested that tree planting in school yards and parks be done at the proper season earlier in the year named by experts and that it should be made known that Arbor day was a time appointed for ceremonies and programs bearing on the subject. Trees may therefore be set in the school yards at any time, and the sooner the better. Leafing is on the way. If shrubs are to be transplanted one should not delay, but get to work at once and set rosebushes, lilacs, snowballs, privet and tree honeysuckle or any of the native wild shrubs which will make good progress during the rains of April and May.

Hints on Tree Planting. The best shade trees are compact and symmetrical. Never select a tree which has a bare odor. Root spreading trees should be avoided. All the news all the time—The Argus
