TOWN CHARACTER DISTURBS SCHOOL

Mrs. Margaret Peters and Her Faithful Dog Make Morning Social Call.

ATTEND GERMAN CLASS

Raises Such a Commotion That the Teacher Appeals to Principal For Aid.

Mrs. Margaret Peters, a well known character about town, was a visitor at the Rock Island high school this morning. Accompanied by her faithful dog, she entered the portals of the institute for public learning, and selecting the room of Miss Hellenstell, instructor in German and French, as the most likely to divulge interest, she entered the room and chose a seat in the rear.

Miss Hellenstell, desirous of furnishing her visitor with everything of interest on the program, inquired if she understood German. The reply was in the affirmative. A book was proffered, but Mrs. Peters desired only to listen to the recitation of the students. The most brilliant showed their ability. Mrs. Peters enjoyed the class.

DOG GETS RESTLESS.

The dog apparently is not fluent in the German tongue, so the efforts of the pupils to please were not to his liking, though they did their best. He became restless and wandered about the room, inspecting each of the objects. The pupils turned their attention from their lesson to the animal. Miss Hellenstell was worried. She stepped over to the office of Principal Burton and sought his advice and aid in the conduct of her class. He went to her class room and asked the visitor if she would tie the dog outside. No, she preferred to remain where she was. The warmth of the room was too good to waste. The principal became insistent, and finally the pair consented to vacate their stronghold, but only after he showed that he meant what he said. She was escorted to the street and there was no invitation for her to return.

APPLE VENDER GETS A CARGO OF BOOZE

Spends Night in Jail and When Let Out This Morning Conducts Cut Price Sale.

A farmer from Cordova whose rear cognomen is Coyne, came close to exchanging a load of apples for a cargo of booze yesterday, and but for a little assistance by police authorities this morning, he would have made the trade. He acquired the cargo of booze alright enough, and was hauled into the police station last night shortly before midnight. He slept peacefully but when he awoke this morning he could not realize his position. He wanted his apples and the team that had aided him to transport them to market. He could not remember where he had left them. He was given his liberty and with a little aid soon located the fruit in a lively stable. He gave the keeper two sacks of apples for the night's rental and then started out to peddle. Desirous of making up for lost time, he offered his product for four bits per bushel.
