Ancient Tales of the Law

Of law and the "law's delays" these ancient tales are recorded: A woman vainly pleading her case many times before Philip of Macedonia received at every refusal the reply that he "had not the time." At last her patience gave out and she said to him, "Then cease to reign." The monarch, feeling that he had deserved this rebuke, immediately listened to case merited. Anacharsis, the Scythian philosopher, speaking of the laws of Solon, said, "They were like the web of a spidervery good for holding the weak, but her and rendered the justice that her allowing the strong to escape." A petty thief was being led to prison. Diogenes said to him: "Fool, why didn't you rob on a grand scale? Then it would have been you that would be sending ### others to prison."

The Painter and the Cobbler. The painter Apelles, who flourished in the time of Alexander, was shown a picture by an inferior artist who boasted of having sketched it out in an exceedingly short space of time. "Yes, I can see that very well," said Apelles, "but I am surprised that you did not make several other pictures exactly like this in the same space of time." We are indebted, according to tradition, to this same Apelles for one of our common phrases. The painter had listened with putience and profit to a cobbler's criticism of the sandals in a picture. But when the cobbler began to enlarge the field of his criticism to other parts of the painting he received this rebuke from Apelles: "Shormaker, stick to your last."

Hibernation.

In the state known as "hibernation" respiration practically ceases. Digestion seems to follow respiration, and the waste of lissue is reduced to the smallest possible limit, the circulation in the meantime being only just sufficient to sustain life. It has been ascertained that unimais can endure the loss of tissue until it amounts to 40 per cent of their normal weight. Should the weight be reduced beyond that limit the result is death.
