COUNTY SEAT NEWS

A big program and Community Christmas Tree is being prepared for the coming holidays. The correspondent is preparing to celebrate Christmas with greater fervor than usual. Our boy will return from his first year's schooling away from home, to assist us in the celebration.
Mr. Mc Guire and son from Mangum, Oklahoma, who had been out and looked over the town and vicinity loaded up the lares and penates on a big truck, created the dogs and cats and piled the family into a big touring car and moved to Mosquero, lock stock and barrel. They are now camped out on one of the big farms and looking around preparatory to settling permanently in the county seat.

Mr. L. R. Smith chief deputy sheriff of Harding County made a business trip to the Pasamonte neighborhood Monday of this week. He reports everything in that neighborhood about as usual. Fair crops last year but a very dry and unpromising fall and winter that has begun to make the coming wheat crop look rather discouraging at the present time. A great many of the farmers in that part of the country raise a great deal of corn so that they are not as discouraged as nearer home where they confine themselves to the growing of wheat almost exclusively.

Quite a lot of mis-information seemed to have gotten into the newspapers recently in regard to the bank robbery at Logan. For the purpose of keeping the record straight and so that the people may know just what happened. It seems that a couple of young school kids, each about nineteen years old after reading of the highly successful robberies daily printed in the press conceived the brilliant idea of turning bank robbers themselves. They secured a car from the father of one of the boys and deciding that about the sleepiest town in the State was Logan they pulled into town, armed with some boot-leg whiskey, a couple of revolvers and a rifle. They loafed around town the greater part of the afternoon, entering the bank on various pretexts until about five o'clock when they held up Mr. McFarland and his wife, attempted to shut them up in the vault secured the money that they could find at hand and fled in the car towards Mosquero. A posse was soon in full pursuit and on one or two occasions some of the party came close enough to the fugitives to exchange shots. Sheriff Spivey learned of the hold up and taking Jim Lloyd and R. L. Keller set out to head them off. While he held up one car for examination he saw another car coming in his direction which as soon as it came in sight turned off across the country. He immediately set out in pursuit of the car. He was rapidly gaining upon the car when they undertook to cross the creek. The engine wet with water that was thrown over the car by the speed with which they hit the water and stuck. The Sheriff then drove by the car to a level place in which to turn and there met the pursuing posse from Logan. They came back and took the boys in charge and the Logan posse began preparing a rope from the canvass that was in the car and throwing it around the neck of one of the boys undertook to strangle him when Sheriff Spivey interposed and was grabbed by some of the bunch who insisted on their right to the possession of the prisoners. It looked for the moment if there would be a serious fight between the sheriff's posse and the pursuers which was happily averted when the sheriff took the boys in charge and brought them to town. The next morning they were turned over to Sheriff Simpson of Quay County and a search made for the money. A part of it was found near where the boys were captured but the balance had not been found a few days ago. One of the boys, Joe, as he is familiarly called here, is Comesindo Duran, a half brother of our County assessor, J. M. Baca and a nephew of Juan J. Duran, Democratic candidate for Secretary of State a few years ago. The other Lewis Baca is the son of Jose de la Luz Baca a well known stockman of the Ute Creek vicinity.

The weather man seems to have a perpetual groutch on this winter. He seems to have a continual spite against the Mesa and is trying to get our goat and needless to say he has almost succeeded. It blows up nice and warm, we get out our summer underwear and begin to think about doing a little gardening and then it blows up a cold spell that seems to freeze the blood in our veins every time we peep out of the house, and we get fired up for winter and it turns hot and we have to sit out in the middle of the street and cool off. It clouds, up a few drops of rain or a few healthy flakes of snow falls and we begin to think that the long drought has broken at last and then it turns loose a dry, dusty, windy day that makes us want to sell out our holdings here and pull out for California, but before we can dig down through the cloud of dust to locate our farm, it clears off and smiles, and gives us such balmy, dazzling weather that we decide that California can go hang it has no climate to compare with ours anyhow.

Well, Christmas is almost here and as usual we are in a peck of trouble. We don't just know where this foolishness should stop, but feel that it should stop somewhere considerably this side of where it has now reached. We are supposed to send out a number of cards. We know that about half of those that we should send cards to don't care much whether we are dead or alive, rich, poor or in good or poor health, but they will send us a card and we feel that we would be committing a mortal sin if we failed to reciprocate. And yet we know that they are as much as we. We are also expecting to receive several neck ties, a few knitted and crochet articles that we shall have to gush over for the next three months and hide out for the next year and expect to likewise send out a goodly supply of cigars, and numerous other articles that we are sure will be an incumbrance and a bore to the recipients and that will doubtless give them as much trouble at it did us in digging it up. We have about decided to absolutely refuse to receive any xmas packages unless it leaks and strongly of an illegal alcoholic content. And to refuse to give presents unless it is to some child that we know can not and will not try to return the compliment next year.

GRAIN TRADE REVIEW

Wheat prices have advanced materially the past month, owing to reduced receipts and diminishing stocks. Foreign news has been of more hopeful nature, the financial situation being better and the greater part of the wheat overbought by European importers cleaned up, as well as the grain at the Atlantic seaboard.

Theoretically, the United States has sold its exportable surplus, and there is a disposition on the part of the trade to pay more attention to statistics now than there was a while ago. The purchases by India in the world's markets have exceeded an expectations, being estimated so far as 30,000,000 bushels, which indicates that the crop of that country is far below domestic requirements, and there is nothing in the crop news to indicate that India will have any grain to spare when the 1922 crop is harvested.

How much of crop grain remains in Argentina, available for export, remains a mystery, as the estimates cover a wide range. Harvesting of the new crop there is now under way, and financial conditions will determine whether or not Argentina is forced to sell early in the season.

General rains have fallen in Australia, and the outlook in that country is good for a crop of 1,000,000 bushels larger than last year, with the prospect that Japan and India will take a large part of the exportable surplus, as both countries are buying heavily there.

There has been a tendency on the part of European authorities for some time to belittle the import needs of Europe, while at the same time the United States has exported more wheat so far this season than during corresponding period in any other year.

Course grains are in a rut, and while they are low, as compared with wheat and other commodities, there is a lack of incentive to take the buying side heavily.

There has been some change in sentiment in the corn market, due to the belief that prices are low enough for the time being, but outside interest is not large, and the market is easily influenced at times. Export demand shows improvement, and farmers are inclined to hold their corn in the belief that refic through the War Finance Corporation, will ultimately result in higher prices.

Oats were dull but steady, with cash demand only fair, owing to the abnormally large stocks, but the period of liberal accumulation at terminal markets has passed, and a better inquiry for Canadian sorts has developed recently.

Red Cross Trains 147 Blind Vets In Useful Work

Training designed to fit them for the battle of life was taken by 147 blind ex-service men at the Red Cross Institute for the Blind, near Baltimore, Md., during the fiscal year 1920-1921, according to the report of the Institute for that period.

Of this number, 19 have gone on to other institutions, in almost every case to institutions where those having sight are receiving advanced education. The blind ex-service men who have entered such institutions are provided with special textbooks in Braille, reading which they were taught at the Red Cross Institute. Twelve men have passed from the Institute to successfully carry on some occupation or business for which they were fitted by special training. A few have withdrawn from the Institute because of poor physical condition, 14 are receiving further "training on the job" and 57 are still in training.

New Mexico, the new winter wheat crop is making a poor start, and rains sufficient to germinate the wheat and cause good growth are badly needed. However, it is too early to start a crop scare, and there is nothing in the situation as yet to cause any great uneasiness on the part of the trade but it will not be surprising if there is a somewhat larger loss in the Southwest, due to winter killing, than in the past few years.
