HOW HE ESCAPED

The insurance agent smiled pleasantly as he introduced the medical examiner to the prospective policy-holder; he could well afford to be gracious after landing so reluctant a fish. Then he withdrew politely.

The examiner thumped the applicant in the back and listened to his heart.

"Good," he said. "Now let me ask you a few questions—just a mere formality, you understand. Is your father living?"

"No he died of kidney trouble at the age of forty."

"And your mother?"

"Consumption at thirty-seven."

"And her parents?"

"Tuberculosis victims, both of them."

"How about your grandparents on the other side?"

"Bright's disease and heart trouble in early life."

"This is terrible," said the examiner.

"Do you drink, sir?"

"Moderately."

"About how much?"

"About a quart of whiskey a day, I should say."

"Dear me! And you smoke?"

"Yes; a box of fifty cigars last me half a week."

"You are very nervous, I see."

"I can't help it. I don't sleep at all, and I can't eat a thing."

"How about your weight?"

"I have lost twenty pounds in two months."

The examiner shook his head. "I am afraid I shall have to report you as a bad risk," he said.

"Do, please," answered the uninsured.

"Paint me as black as you can, and keep this five-dollar bill for yourself."—L. H. Robbins in Newark News.
