Shoved It On.

"Don't you call me or lie," said an old negro to an acquaintance with whom he was disputing. "Don't you call me or lie for I won't take it."

"Yes is or lie?"
"O, wall, of yer shoves it on me, I ain't gwinter kick. Now what yer gwine ter do 'bout it? Neber takes er lie lessen er man shoves it on me."—Arkansaw Traveler.

What Puzled Him.

It was reported that a day or two ago Mr. St. John went into a Kansas drug store and called for a glass of soda water.

His left eye accidentally twined as the clerk gazed at him inquiringly. The mistaken clerk, not knowing the gentleman, gave him a liberal allowance of the usual flavor demanded upon such occasions, and the glass was drained to the dregs. "My goodness, gracious me!" I don't see how men can drink liquor when they can get soda water like that."

Got His Drink.

Many elderly citizens will remember Tom Hancock in his day, some fifty years ago, the handsomest young man in Boston. He was a nephew of the illustrious John Hancock, and resided in the old Beacon street family mansion. He was quite as noted for his "crackles" as for his personal beauty. On one occasion when he had been on a week's spree his relatives scoured him in the mansion house, and hiding carefully his clothing, so that he had literally "nothing to wear," thought they had him safe, high and dry. Tom however thought differently, and made a thorough search of the premises. He did not find any of his own clothing, but rummaging a large antique chest, resurrected a full suit of court regimentals which his illustrious Uncle John was accustomed to wear on State occasions. Arraying himself in these he slipped out of the house and made his way to the well-known refreshment saloon of Corbet Luddington, well remembered as "Old Tom's" on Winter street, where he was well known and his credit unquestioned. His appearance caused a great sensation in that locality. [Boston Budget.

A Broken Gambler.

Billy Deutsch, of New York, has had another reverse of luck in Paris, and has come back to America in a condition known among the fancy as "schlembrake." He left Paris without any elaborate preparation, but inserted a card in one of the papers in which he said he had neither the time nor the disposition to bid farewell to each individual friend and creditor, and so he had out the knot and run. It is said that he owes in the neighborhood of a million francs—a mere trifle to a gambler. Billy Deutsch did much to make America respected in France. He won 1,700,000 francs, or $340,000, in twenty-eight consecutive days at the parisian clubs, and was dubbed the "King of Baccarat." He came back here and out a great swell, returned to Paris, lost every cent he had, lived from hand to mouth for six months. Then he won $100,000 again from some money he borrowed of a friend, and now he has run through it all and gone to the very bottom of the ladder. He is a million francs poorer than a pauper. Mr. Deutsch has decided to become an actor. This is the way with famous men—they either play "Hamlet" or lecture.

A Dream of Wealth that Comes True.

A special dispatch to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat from Social Circle, Ga., says: Walnut Grove, in Walton County, is enjoying a remarkable sensation. Among the most respected residents of the place is Miss Laura Shelmut, who has passed the meridian of youth, but remains an active participant in society events. About a week ago she had a dream. Before her eyes was spread the panorama of the surrounding country. A young man elegantly dressed and ornamented with a red necktie, stepped up to her, and pointing out a certain spot told her to dig and wealth would be hers. Just then she awoke and the young man was gone, but the memory of the dream so troubled her that she slept no more that night. Monday night the dream was substantially repeated. So great an impression did it make that she arose and went to bed no more that night. The third night she again had the dream which so compressed her that on the following morning she went out and sure enough at the designated spot, about three feet under ground, she found a small tin box filled with coined gold. The whole community is excited over finding the treasure.

Stalwarts Against Blaine.

A New York special to the Washington Gazette of Sunday last says: "I wired you last Saturday what I heard about the stalwart scheme to vote for Cleveland instead of Blaine. I expect that the coming week will develop this scheme so fully that all reason for keeping it a secret will be gone. There is no phase of the matter that will make interesting reading for your readers. I said last week that President Arthur favored this Stalwart arrangement, but for obvious reasons would take no active part in it. I am absolved from my promise of secrecy in this matter by certain publications that have been made that there is a partial agreement between Blaine and Arthur, whereby, the former in consideration of the support of the administration will throw the Half Breed influence in favor of the latter being made United States Senator instead of Lapham. But Arthur is not acting in good faith towards Blaine. He is afraid to trust the latter, believing him to be utterly treacherous. Meanwhile he will promise anything, even to induce the Stalwarts to vote for Blaine. He will not however, keep any of those promises. He couldn't if he would. Mr. Arthur has not as much prominence among the Stalwarts as formerly. They don't like his coquetry with Blaine and Blaine's friends. He may make such a bargain with Blaine, but he cannot deliver the goods, if he wanted to. Meantime there is a perfect agreement, tacit if not expressed, between the Stalwarts and Kelly. Tammany will vote for Butler. The Stalwarts will vote for Cleveland. This is done to make Blaine's humiliation the more complete, and to let him see that the Stalwarts defeated him in New York, and not the Democrats."

What Got Him.

The other day several acquaintances of a Detroitier who is noted for his absent-mindedness determined to see how far they could go in playing off on this trait of his without discovery. One of them carried in a petition asking the common council to appoint Sarah Jane Blank a city physician, Sarah being the absent-minded man's wife.

"Petition—petition," he replied as he was asked to sign it "Oh, certainly. Sarah Jane Blank—common council—city physician—of course."

The next who entered had a document in his hand, which he explained by saying:

"Say, Blank, here's a petition to the board of public works to shelve the front steps of the house at No. Woodward avenue. Will you sign it?"

"Of course—of course. Board of public works projecting steps—ever pray—there she is."

It was the front steps of his own house, but he was ready for the third man, who dropped in to observe:

"Say, Blank, we propose to open street to strike Woodward avenue, between — and — streets. Will you assist us?"

"Certainly—certainly—ought to be a new street there—of course I will," was the reply, although the proposed new street would run plumb through his house.

In the course of three or four days he signed a petition to have a pest house built on the rear end of his lot—to have his son appointed a chimney sweep—to have a guardian appointed for his children, and to permit him to establish a gambling house in his residence, but when an acquaintance came in and asked him to sign a confession that he (Blank) was a fugitive murderer from the state of Ohio, he looked at the name several times, scratched his head in a vigorous manner, and replied:

"John Y. Blank—John Y. Blank—let's see! Why—why, that's my own name—of course it is! Better leave it for a few days and I'll try and remember who it was I murdered!"—[Detroit Free Press.

Attempted Bank Robbery.

A daring attempt to rob the First National Bank of Las Vegas, was frustrated Tuesday morning Sept. 23, and one of the would be robbers, James Pearson, was shot and killed. The particulars are as follows: Monday morning the teller experienced a difficulty in opening the doors of the vault, caused by the settling of the foundation of the same. The suspicion of the employes was aroused and the sounding of the floor showed a hollow below the vault. George J. Dinkel, vice president, accompanied by the teller, went into a vacant store room, three doors east of the bank, a drug store intervening. The cellar of the vacant room was explored and the mouth of a tunnel, pointing to the direction of the bank discovered. The bank officers kept quite, but that night placed a strong guard on the vault.

The following morning at 1 o'clock sounds of the working were heard beneath the vault floor and supposing the rascals caged the alarm was raised and the mouth of the tunnel patrolled. It wasn't long before Patricio Gonzales and another policeman had joined the small army of excited and expectant watchers and after waiting patiently for hours and no one appearing, or making the least possible movement that could be heard by the waiting men the two officers jumped down into the cellar. Crouched in the dim daylight in a corner of the same within hearing distance of the crowd above, was discovered an unknown person, trembling with either rage or fear, the officers knew not which. Knowing that the man, who was afterwards found to be unarmed, would sell his life as dearly as possible, they gave him no show at all but opened fire upon him, shooting him five times. He fell dead without uttering a word. A robe was brought into requisition, by the means of which the body was drawn up to the floor, and all were startled almost beyond expression to recognize the dead man. He was none other than James Pearson, a quite inoffensive stonemason who had the respect of everybody in the community. Although Pearson was the only one captured, the people of Las Vegas think there is a regular organized band backing him. The police have started in well, and if they treat the rest the same way, it won't take long to forever clean out the gang.

Elisha E. Everett, a cabinet maker and inventor, of Philadelphia, who has taken out twenty or thirty different patents for mechanical appliances, is now at work on an invention that, if successful, may completely revolutionize ocean and railway travel. This is nothing else than the reduplication of steam power. He has designed a steamboat which, by means of a succession of paddles beneath the water, may attain a speed of thirty knots an hour and accomplish a trip to Europe in three or four days.
