

UNEASINESS FELT IN MONEY MARKET

Henry Clews Thinks Unsettling Due to European Political Situation; Nervousness Account Wheat and Corn Manifested.

New York, Aug. 9.—Henry Clews says: As was to have been expected, the money market is this week particularly uneasy in the general feeling of international business uncertainty. Political affairs abroad have had, at least on the surface, a more pronounced effect on the attitude of investors than in previous years.

As has been repeatedly emphasized in these columns, the cause and the progress have concerned all the great financial centers of the world into a single market, of which the various branches such as London, New York, Paris, Berlin, Amsterdam, etc., are not so much independent as they were formerly.

In a decade, in 1901 the value of our exports, valued at only $1,000,000,000 and in 1910 it was $1,800,000,000. This shows the total dependence of our country on the rest of the world. It is a movement that is increasing rapidly and it is not possible to see the outlines of our great trade, industrial systems and industrial organizations, and a prosperity that has been on a high level, will be actively increased by the new reciprocal trade agreements that have just been announced with our neighbors to the north.

The financial situation of the money market is becoming more uncertain and it is suggested that additional legislation may provide for general banking movement of sufficient volume to cause any general advance in prices.

The river has fallen considerably lately, but from all indications there will be plenty of water for everybody. Crop conditions generally are in excellent shape on account of an abundance of water.

The board of county commissioners has ordered that the total bonded indebtedness of Dona Ana county, which aggregates $7,272,371, shall be converted into general county refunding bonds of the county of Dona Ana.

A movement has been started to extend a telephone line from Las Cruces to Organ, a distance of 16 miles. The Organ district is beginning to be quite active and the lack of telephone service is felt keenly.

MRS. STRAHORN HAS WELL DEPICTED EARLY DAY LIFE

Interesting Book By Well Known Author Contains Unusually Amusing Reminiscence of Scene in This City

"THIRTY THOUSAND MILES BY STAGE" This is the title of a book by Mrs. Carv Adair Strahorn, who recounts her own unique experience of path finding and pioneering from the Missouri to the Pacific and from Alaska to Mexico.

The book makes a substantial volume. It contains 250 illustrations by the famous western illustrator Charles M. Russell, and many photographic views of the districts described. It is from the "Ketchikan Press" of G. P. Putnam's Sons.

It deals with the west of thirty-two years ago, and is of particular interest to the people of New Mexico, for it describes with accuracy in an interesting narrative form, the west as it appeared in the early days.

The pictures of such titles as "Santa Fe in 1875" stir up a flood of memories among old timers. Real frontier types, the outfit house and peddler of the wilderness as well as the queer picturesque Indian and "bad man" are described in the vivid yet authoritative terms.

An amusing incident of a new speaker who attempted to master the Spanish pronunciation of the proper names in Albuquerque, is taken from the Albuquerque Democrat of over 20 years ago. It runs as follows:

"A few days since a stranger from the unincorporated wilds of the east where the undertaker attain their highest state of sophistication, came out to Albuquerque, N. M. to visit a friend. While walking along Railroad avenue he said to a friend: 'There goes a man that I met up in La Julia, giving me the Spanish pronunciation. You know La Junta,' the friend replied. 'That is a Spanish name, and in that language I take the sound of H.'"

"Is that so, well I must try to catch on to that." Then after strolling along a short distance further, he asked: 'Where are these James Spelman of which I hear so much in the papers?' "The Spelmans, they are over the mountains about 60 miles."

"Darn the language—it breaks me all up. That's a pretty nice house over there—that Armitio house, isn't it?"—and again he gave the J the proper pronunciation.

"You mean the Armitio house. Yes, it's a good one, too."

"Darn the way of asking the English alphabet. I reckon, then, that must be the Haffa Brothers' store down the street."

"No, that is not a Spanish name, I think it is French. However, it is pronounced as spelled."

"Well, how in Santa Fe is a fellow going to call what is Spanish and what isn't? Why couldn't they spell their own language according to the original habit?"

"Oh, you'll soon catch on. You will find it safest to give the Spanish pronunciation to nearly everything here."

An hour later they sat down to the tables of the San Felipe hotel and after securing the bill of fare the stranger said to the waiter: 'You may bring me a nice, juicy piece of roast beef, some pigs haw with pepper sauce, some fried chicken, some pork with apple holly, some hot potatoes with the hackets on—un-skin, you know—some facts with current ja—mean fish, and, oh, some—'

"At this point the waiter swooned and the guests in the room let out a roar of laughter that gave the champion the chills and fever. This made the stranger mad, but his friends held him off and took him from the room, and as he went through the door he remarked: 'I ain't take a hoke, but it makes me mad to be played for a greeny.'"

The author of this admirable bit of nonsense was Charles O'Connor Roberts, well remembered as a brilliant writer for the press for some years here. He was at that time city editor of the Albuquerque Democrat, and the 'stranger' referred to in the squib is now one of the most prominent men of local newspaper circles.

Geographically Ambiguous. The preacher had been eloquent in his remarks concerning the young girl over whose remains the funeral services were being held. Tears were in the eyes of all present. Even the speaker's voice trembled with the force of his emotion.

SIXTH CAVALRY TO SUCCEED FOURTH

Troops at Ft. Huachuca, Arizona Will Change Posts With Iowa Regiment; May Strengthen Garrison.

Fort Huachuca, Ariz., Aug. 9.—The Sixth cavalry will be ordered back to Fort Mohave, Ia., after the presidential election in Mexico in September, and will be succeeded as garrison of Fort Huachuca by the Fourth cavalry, now stationed at Fort Meade, S. D. Units have been advanced for the transportation of the troops from Fort Meade to Huachuca, with forage, baggage and the regimental band.

It is said that the the Fourth will be permanently stationed at the Huachuca mountain army post, but pending the Mexico presidential elections the Sixth will remain at Huachuca.

Advices have been received at the post that Fort Huachuca is to be enlarged into a two-squadron post and the construction superintendent, Captain Chittis, is expected at the post this week to supervise the work of construction and remodeling that will be necessary. An appropriation of $158,000 is available for this purpose.

The experience of the Sixth since the trouble in Mexico spread along the international border, he said he have thought that Fort Huachuca is still a convenient place for an army post. The practice of the troops all over southern Arizona have proved that Huachuca is within striking distance of any point on the Arizona border. The climate makes the hikes easy on the troops and splendid camping sites may be found at any place on the border.

SUICIDE AFTERMATH OF PARDON

Woman Who Was Witness in Trailer Case Shoots Self With 30-30 When Prisoner is Paroled by Young.

Globe, Ariz., Aug. 9.—Coincided with the paroling by Acting Governor Young of William Traitor, who was sentenced to 11 years' imprisonment for the murder of "Shorty" Dallas at a ranch near Chino, was the suicide of Mrs. Winifred Fidler last Wednesday at her home at Duncan, the day after the parole was issued. She committed suicide by shooting herself with a 30-30 rifle.

The cause for the suicide is not known, though it is suspected that she feared Traitor might harm her because of her testimony against him at the time of his conviction. She had brooded much over the killing of Dallas, as at the time of the trial it was rumored that it was she and a man by the name of Attender had placed the blame on Traitor in order to escape. She, however, turned state's evidence and was allowed her freedom after the trial.

The evidence at the trial was that Mrs. Fidler at the time was being with a Chinaman and that Traitor and Attender had gotten her to consent to leave the country with them. They had but one horse and the testimony showed that when they got near the camp of "Shorty" Dallas they decided to ask him for a horse. Attender and the woman were on the horse and Traitor went ahead to ask Dallas for a horse or mule and Dallas refused. He then went back to the two who were on the horse and reported that Dallas had refused. After a short council between the three they left the woman with the horse and both men went to Dallas' camp and upon being again refused Dallas was shot by Traitor in a most cold-blooded manner.

Then they took a mule and returned to the woman and informed her, so she testified, of what they had done. Mrs. Fidler, about three years ago, lived in a tent at Kinney Park in this city, and was well known in certain circles in Globe.
