 and the affair had been arranged as a farewell party, and was rendered very much gayer by the glad news that the guests of honor will remain in this city.
 An impromptu musical program was prepared. Several of the numbers were sung in costume and the scenery was quite vivid.
 Mr. George Everett sang "The Demon King" with an appropriate electric lights and standing, apparently, out in a very black night through which the lightning flashed frequently in dazzling zigzag streaks.
 Mr. Christian, garbed in a handsome tuxedo outfit, sang the "Forsador Song" from "Carmen" in a most dramatic manner and completed his number by skillfully killing a toy bull.
 Mrs. E. L. Bradford and Mr. Christian sang the duet from the "Bonnie and Clyde" and sang the song through with a quaint and typical Italian accent.
 The male quartet sang several numbers. Mrs. Harlow played a selection on the piano, and there were delightful solos by Mrs. E. L. Bradford and Mrs. Charles Andrews.
 A delicious supper was served about midnight and the guests departed all declaring that they had had an entirely pleasant and unusually enjoyable evening.
 Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Meyer, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. P. K. Harlow, Mr. and Mrs. Felix Bava, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Vanu, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Bradford, Miss Evelyn Everett, Mr. Thomas Christian and Mr. H. Hullock.

Favorites You Know In the Movies
KATHLYN WILLIAMS OF THE SELIG COMPANY.
 Miss Kathryn Williams has been the leading body of the Selig Polyscope company for several years and has increased her great popularity recently in the "Adventures of Kathryn," written especially for her by Harold McGrath.
 Miss Williams was born in Butte, Mont., and spent her early life there. During her senior year in high school the falling family fortunes compelled her to start out to seek her own.
 Her charm of face and grace of figure her poise and histrionic resourcefulness attracted the attention of a western theatrical manager and he engaged her for small parts in a Butte playhouse. She had not been on the stage long before she was observed by Senator Clark, the copper king, who made inquiries about the young girl and offered to give her a dramatic education.
 Through his generosity, Miss Williams was sent to the Franklin Sargent dramatic school in New York, where she studied two years, with such avidity and to such advantage that she accomplished wonders and was, at her graduation, accorded the position of leading woman with a dramatic company.
 William N. Selig, seeing Miss Williams and engaged her for leading woman for his stock company in Chicago.
 Miss Williams entered into the new work with a zest that made her a valuable acquisition for the serious side of the motion picture business.
 Having run the gamut of the sentimental and tragic heroines, she became the favorite in a new sort of drama in which "wild" scenes figured gaily and victoriously. The beasts of the jungle prior to this time had never been brought into the line of the camera without steel bars between.
 Miss Williams has proven herself past mistress in all plays which require unusual work and daring. She has had several narrow escapes from serious injury but remains undaunted and fearless, seeming to court a dangerous situation for the sheer spice of it on the stage, recognized her of novelty.
 Golden Rule Dollivers; Margaret Cameron—The Dollivers, who are from the west, energetic and optimistic, buy an automobile and what they do with the automobile makes the story. Their friends call them the Golden Rule Dollivers because they begin sharing their car the very first day they use it to give pleasure or pleasure's sake to the poor, blind, wretched people on the sidewalk. The wiser stories of their adventures bear the titles: "The Man in the Road," "The Old Deary," "The Dollivers Caught Napping," "Doing the Dollivers," "Aid to the Injured," "The Dollivers Dine Out," "The End and the Beginning."
 The Light of Western Stars; Zane Grey—The scene of Mr. Gray's new novel is laid near the turbulent Mexican border. A New York society girl—Majesty to her friends—buys a ranch which becomes the center of activities in frontier warfare. From the moment of her arrival in the west things begin to happen. Gene Stewart, an intemperate cowboy, behaves in a most astonishing manner. Nevertheless she makes him her superintendant. She is carried off by bandits but rescued by Gene and she finds herself constantly thinking of him. After a misunderstanding Gene goes to serve in the Mexican army, and is captured by rebels. He is sentenced to death but is saved by Majesty in a dramatic dash across country.

The Price of Peace: Samuel G. Blythe—The price—the native honor a man holds dear, the place—any/one of the "seats of the mighty" in any American capitol; the book—accurate in every incident except for names and places, a revelation of the story of the civil sense in American political life. The author of this remarkable book is probably the best informed journalist in America in point of knowledge of the inner workings of capital life. Many readers will recognize him as a contributor for many years for "Who's Who and Why" in the Saturday Evening Post.

The Children's Blue Bird: Madame Maurice Maeterlinck—This is the story of the "Blue Bird" told in prose and beautifully illustrated for young folks. No doubt, however, that many older people will enjoy the wonderful story as well as the smaller folk.
