RELIEF! CATARRH.
WONDERFUL TO RELATE.

Forty years a sufferer from CATARRH.

Mr. Henry Cheves, the writer of the above formerly of Crawford county, Ga., writes:

"I have been afflicted with Catarrh of the bladder for many years, and have tried every remedy, but have not been cured until I used your medicine. It cured me entirely, and I feel like a new man. I weighed 125 pounds and now weigh 140. I used thirteen bottles of medicine, and the only regret I have is that being on the honorable walks of life I may not have influence to prescribe all our sufferer to use what has cured me."

LIFE WITH THE SIOUX INDIANS.

At Fort Yates, Dakota—Fine Specimens of Manhood—Primitive Wearing.

The feature of the Clark Institute's annual meeting was an address by Judge Sage on his personal experiences among the Sioux Indians, at Fort Yates, Dakota in the summer of 1881. He was there at the time the formal transfer was made of the care of the Indians from the war to interior department. He said that Sitting Bull, the great Chief, was not there. He would not come until he saw how the others were treated. One of the chiefs, Gaul, he said, had a strike like Salvini. As soon as the transfer was made this chief and others immediately appropriated clothing and other articles in sight. The fort there was simply a space of ground inclosed by a picket fence, inside of which were the officers' quarters. The Indians said they could eat up the garrison in a few minutes if they cared to.

He described the Sioux Indians as fine specimens of manhood. They had finely developed chests, small arms and splendid legs. They were symmetrically perfect. The dances they had, which he described, he said developed the muscles. When these dances were going on the songs of the men, while beating on the big drum, called the tom-tom, could be heard five miles.

One way the young Indians had of wooing the squaws he described. He saw three young bucks standing together one day with their blankets wrapped about them. They waited until the young squaws came along, and then one of them stepped out in front of her, and throwing half of his blanket around her, pulled her up to him. If she did not try to get away it was considered that she liked him. If she did he stepped back and another fellow tried it, and so on, unless one of them was successful. The judge had on exhibition a lot of souvenirs of his trip in the shape of clothing and ornaments, implements of war, etc., which he had purchased or had been given to him. Among them was an ear-ring about twelve inches long, which had been worn by Sitting Bull's daughter, "Sleeping Water." She gave it to Mrs. Sage.

The ornaments were all very handsome. He related his experience in visiting Chief Gaul in his tent. While there he unconsciously stepped on ground which they considered sacred, on account of the death of a child. The only way he could make amends was by giving the chief presents. Judge Sage said that he thought that they were misunderstood and underrated. He thought that if they were treated fairly and honestly they would be all right. Among themselves they were perfectly honest, and trusted each other implicitly. In the division of food given them they were very careful to give all a fair share. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

After the Fall of Fort Fisher.

The sides of the embrasure were of logs and planks, and the shells had scarred and seamed not only the gun carriage, but the planks, and torn great holes in the sand, to be filled up by the next explosion. In those holes lay some of those who had served the gun—a proper grave for an artist!—one excavated by the shell of the enemy. Out of one of these half-filled craters projected the delicate hand and wrist of what must have been quite a boy, which was covered with a nice, delicately knitted glove—not a mitten—fastened about the wrist by a silken cord and tassel of light blue. Was it a sister, or a sweetheart, who had knit that glove for their soldier boy? Whether or no, he was dead, and probably killed by the same shell that buried him. Of all the things I saw at Fort Fisher, I think most often that hand, with its home-made glove, pointing heavenward. —E. S. in Inter Ocean.

Statue of William Lloyd Garrison.

O. L. Warner's bronze statue of William Lloyd Garrison, which is to stand on Commonwealth avenue, Boston, nearly opposite the Hotel Vendome, represents Mr. Garrison as seated, looking to the right. His right hand rests on his thigh and holds a roll of manuscript, and his left arm is resting on the arm of the chair. The head is uncovered. His features indicate benevolence and firmness of will. The pose is easy and natural. The figure would measure nine feet if erect. The artist has made a work of simplicity and strength. After beginning the work Mr. Warner discovered a life mask of Mr. Garrison's face, made probably during the war, and this aided him greatly. The casting has been satisfactory. —Chicago Journal.

Tree-Planting Near Russian Railroads.

A correspondent of The Farmers' Review says that when riding over thousands of miles of Russian railway four years ago, he was interested in the system of shrub and tree-planting to arrest snow at all points where banks could form. The trees are planted twenty-five to thirty feet from the rails in five to seven lines, five feet apart and the plants a foot and a half apart in the rows. The three inner lines are planted with trees, and the outer ones with conifers or shrubs. This system is said to protect very perfectly the roads during the gales on the steppes. The snow is whirled in heaps back of and among the trees and shrubs, and fails to reach the rails to a serious extent. —Exchange.

The Curious Kermes Oak.

The Botanical Gardens, London, have succeeded in cultivating the curious Kermes oak (quercus coccifera), which, when punctured by one of the coccus insects, produces the ancient, blood-red dye supposed to have been used by Moses to tint the hangings of the tabernacle. The Kermes oak is a dwarf, bushy shrub, somewhat resembling a holly, and grows profusely in Spain. —Philadelphia Call.

A Very Curious Religious Community.

Early in this century a number of Germans, under the leadership of George Rapp, made a settlement in Pennsylvania fourteen miles from Pittsburgh. They aimed to imitate the example of the disciples as related in the Acts of the Apostles. In other words, they established a community having all things in common. The family relation was regarded for a number of years, but finally the community became celibate, and the husbands and wives lived apart. As a consequence the membership became less and less. At one time they numbered about a thousand persons. All that is left is about fifty old men and women. The community prospered in wealth while it diminished in numbers. In the past its manufactures were famous, especially their broadcloths, flannels and blankets.

Some years ago they bought some wild land in Pennsylvania for the sake of the timber it contained. Subsequently this tract proved to be the middle of the oil-bearing region. Riches poured in upon the community, while all the time it is dying out, because it made no proselytes and would not countenance family life. Visitors to the community tell touching stories of the hunger for children which these old men and women still feel. The babes and little ones who come to Harmony, as their village is called, are passionately caressed and wept over by these celibate communists. In passing it is worthy of note that the Shakers are dying out in numbers. They make few or no proselytes, and the only recruits they get are children they adopt from the almshouses. A history of American socialist experiments, such as the Shakers, the Economites, and the Oneida communists, would be very interesting reading. —Demorest's Monthly.

Talk with a Photographer Artist.

"When a photograph gallery is conducted by an artist good photographs may be expected," said an artist in conversation with a reporter.

"There are none such, or at least very few in the city at the present time."

"Do you know," said he, "that there has been a revolution in this work during the past three or four years? Up to that time the man who had been the longest in the business was sought after on account of his experience. But since the invention of the instantaneous dry-plate process things have changed. Previous to this time artists did not engage in the business for the reason that a knowledge of the chemical department of it was necessary, and while at a tool-time to acquire this knowledge the service commanded but about $10 per week when learned, and, while it did not take many months to acquire the knowledge, no artist would leave his studio long enough to get it. Now all this work is done on a large scale by companies who can supply 500 galleries with prepared plates in a day. In fact, almost every article used in a photograph gallery is supplied in this way, and the only thing now to be furnished is the artist's workmanship and furniture is artistic skill. Rent need not be high, for an artist needs very little light; in fact, he can in a measure supply his own light, and he can paint his own scenery. This the photographer can not do, unless he be also an artist."

Charm of a London Residence.

The local divisions of London are somewhat puzzling. A householder in a letter to a London paper thus illustrates them: "Where do I live?" he asks. "Can any one tell me? I can not, for reasons as follows: The deeds of my house state at Upper Tooting. The postal authorities say at Clapham. The rating people say at Battersea. The local directory says Wimbledon and Putney. If I pay my taxes I must go to Clapham. If I pay the water rate I must do so at Kingston-on-Thames. To pay local rates I must go to Battersea."

"If I give a vote for a member of parliament I must vote for Clapham division. If I look out in front of the house Wadsworth Commons is 300 feet in front of me and Battersea two miles beyond that. If I look out at the back of the house Upper Tooting park is only fifty yards from me. If I walk to the end of my road I am then in the parish of Wadsworth. If I go to the other end of the road I am in Streatham. If I cross over my garden wall I can sit on a post with a part of my body in three or four parishes at the same moment. —Exchange.

Fatal Disease in Colorado Camps.

There are plenty of strange cases in the catalogue of every doctor's personal experience. I ran across several some years ago in one of the mountain camps of Colorado, all fatal, and which, while bearing a certain degree of resemblance, have not been to my knowledge described as a type in any of the medical journals. At the post-mortem we discovered in every instance a hard, foreign body directly in the rear of the right external iliac fossa or outer surface of the hip bone. The foreign body extended downward and varied in length from six to eight inches, the end being tubular in form and terminating in a round, honey-combed structure containing from five to seven separate cells. Singular, wasn't it. By the way, each one of these cells contained a .45-caliber, center-fire cartridge, and the entire foreign body was technically known as a Colt's revolver. These cases were very common in Colorado and the mortality resulting from them was considerable. —Dr. G. F. Reynolds.

Clinkers for Foundation Work.

M. Louvier, an architect of Lyons, refers favorably to the extensive use of clinkers for foundation work in that city and neighborhood. The cost of these clinkers are stated at about $2.50 per cubic yard, and a small quantity of common or hydraulic lime is mixed with them before using, the mixture being then wetted and rammed in layers. —Chicago Times.

A POLICEMAN.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 23, 1885.

Whenever I know of anything that might be of service to my fellow-men I desire to impart such information; hence I give the following facts to the public:

Mrs. M. M. Prince, living at 38 West Fair St. Atlanta, Ga., has been troubled for several months with an ugly form of catarrh, attended with a copious and offensive discharge from both nostrils.

Her system became so affected and reduced that she was confined to bed at my house for some time, and received the attention of three physicians; and used a dozen bottles of an extensively advertised blood remedy, all without the least benefit.

She finally commenced the use of B. B. B., with a decided improvement at once, and when ten bottles had been used she was entirely cured of all symptoms of catarrh.

It gave her an appetite, and increased her strength rapidly, and I cheerfully recommend it as a quick and cheap tonic and Blood Purifier.

J. W. GLOVER, Policeman.

WAS IT CANCER?

I have been taking B. B. B. for six or seven weeks for something like cancer on my neck, and I would not take one thousand dollars for the benefit received.

I had previously tried various so-called blood remedies, but B. B. B. is the best, the quickest and the cheapest blood purifier I ever used. I refer to any merchant of Griffin, Ga.

BOTH HANDS UP.

A NEWANITE SUDDENLY RAISES HIS HANDS FOR THE FIRST TIME IN TWO YEARS.

Correspondence Atlanta Journal.

NEWS, Ga., June 10.—Mr. Jacob G. Spangler, an old and respectable citizen of this place experienced a rather sudden change in his gestive extreme lately. It seems that a little over two years ago Mr. Spangler had a severe attack of Rheumatism, his arms became useless, and, in fact, he could not raise his hands to his head until the other day, when he called on the druggist and obtained a preparation that acted like magic on him, for after taking the first half bottle he could move his arms about, and when he had taken six bottles he was sound and well. Rev. W. W. Fadsworth and our people generally who are familiar with the case almost swear by the wonderful remedy now. Mr. Spangler said the medicine was called B. B. B.
