"Tramp" Printers.
There is an erring, incorrigible, lower type of printers, who has much that is extremely ludicrous in his character. He is prone to error, as the sparks fly upward; and joined to his love by the cup which both cheers and maddens, there is a delicious vagabondism which, considered from an artistic point of view, is positively admissible. Every foreman who has had experience with such wanderers who arrived before him clad in remnants of departed grandeur; who in husky voices with beseeching accents ask for work, and who are gruffly informed that they may "suff" for anyone who is willing that they should do so. The editor of a paper in a small and prosperous New England city once came two of those wretched wights, who appeared to have sounded the depths of adversity. While the editor was peacefully elaborating an article one Summer afternoon he heard a timid voice at the door saying, "Mister, can I speak to you a minute?" An affirmative answer forthwith put the editor on his feet, and in a short, prearranged fat and hand made, followed by an immensely lean party with a tremendous shock of hair. Both seemed to have been some time on the road from some remote point, and to have slept by roadsides without doffing their garments. Their shoes were in the last stage of disrepair. The shorter man wore a huge, broad-brimmed white felt hat, and the tall man held in his hand a "stove pipe," which might at some period early in the previous year have been second hand, but which was now a poor specimen of tenth or twelfth hand. The editor desiring to know to what he was indebted for the honor of this visit, the short man waving his hand and muttering courage, spoke thus: "Me'n pardner's looking for work, and we jest went in to see the foreman, 'n he sent us in here to see you." The editor endeavored to explain that he had nothing to do with the engagement of compositors.

"Well, sir, that ain't exactly it," continued the short man, whose confidence seemed to increase in alarming proportions. "You see the foreman said he'd let us come on as 'subs,' as he was mighty short of men, and some of the regulars was going off on vacations; but we—was a little hard up, and sounded him for—a dollar or two, 'n he sent us in to see you."

The editor, who knew that the foreman was a wag, and who would, somewhat touched by the desperate plight of the two perpetrating printers, discovered that they had really been taken on as 'subs,' and advanced them the two dollars. "But where did you come from?" he inquired, his curiosity quite overcoming his discretion.

"From Chicago. Me'n pardner have been talking a little 'promenade. We had a good sit there, but we got a little hard up, and they lifted us. We got clean dead broke and had to hoof it all the way. We were going to Boston, but when pardner struck this town he said it pleased him, and we kinder concluded to reform and settle down 'n you know
