The Good Man's Joke

Two gentlemen of the cloth were standing on a corner the other day. Evidently they were talking about extra services to be held during the week. "I anticipate a great awakening in my church," said the first speaker. "My people never go to sleep," said the second.

"Ah, there comes my car," replied the first, and they parted company.

Why were they allowed?

"Why were they allowed?" has often been a query with Polly. In place of Polly Larkin.

I think teachers make a terrible mistake sometimes in the way they talk to little folks in the school-room. Harsh words are spoken and forgotten by the teacher; not so with the little ones. The words pierce their hearts like a thorn long after the teacher has inflicted the wound, and it gives them an insight into anything but the beautiful and enviable side of life of the teacher. Most children look upon their teacher at first as something bordering on perfection, and harsh and unkind words leave a mark and shake their faith to an extent that is positively cruel. The other day a tiny little girl who had just entered the school a few days before, left the lunch unattended that she had taken with her and ran all the way home to get a beautiful rosebud for her teacher that her mother had promised her. Securing the coveted rosebud her little feet fairly flew to get back in time for the afternoon session. She had no time to eat her lunch, but she was happy in picturing how pleased her teacher would be with the lovely rosebud when she gave it to her as she passed out in the evening. The teacher placed a sentence for each scholar on the blackboard, and this particular little girl's sentence proved to be uninteresting or dry. She knew nearly all the rest on the board, but her own had had slipped her mind. "I despise stupid girls," said the teacher, when the little girl had to own that she had forgotten her sentence. The sensitive little face quivered and her great blue eyes filled with tears. She could not give her the lovely rosebud now, for the teacher "despised stupid girls," and she would not care for it. All the gladness went out of that little heart, and when school was over she passed out holding the rosebud in the folds of her dress, and when she got out of the building she handed it to a little girl. All its beauty was gone and she felt only the cruel thorns that could pain her no worse than the teacher's unkind words. No matter what the teacher may do in the future, she can never blot out the words that hurt this little child and brought tears to the big blue eyes. Her faith was sadly shaken and the teacher would not have seen forgotten it had she heard the child say in her little heart-broken way, "You can have the rosebud; I don't want it now." Some children would not have cared, for they would possess that happy-go-lucky disposition that never borrows trouble and never take anything to heart; but there are hosts of little children as sensitive to harsh words and manners as the most delicate and fragile flowers are to the frost's icy touch. Polly's heart goes out to the wee folks, and again I say teachers make a cruel mistake when they so far forget themselves as to speak harshly and in a way that holds the child up to the ridicule of the others. Trials and tribulations will come soon enough without encountering sorrow in their mere babyhood.

Stationary and Fuel.
Benjamin Harrison, an ancestor of our ex-President and a signer of the Declaration of Independence, was fond of the good things of this life and a first liver. While a member of the First Congress, which met in Philadelphia, on one occasion he was joined by a friend as he left the congressional hall. Wishing to ask his friend to join him in a bumper, he took him to a certain place and called for two glasses of brandy and water. The man in charge replied that liquor was not included in the supplies furnished Congressmen.

"What is it, then, that I see the New England members come here and drink?"

"Molasses and water, which they have charged to stationery," was the reply.

"Very well," said Harrison, "give me brandy and water and charge it as fuel."

BRIEF REVIEW.

Italy's King Studies Politics.
Victor Emmanuel III is now parliamentary life, as during his father's reign he kept quite out of politics. The only time he is ever known to have expressed an opinion was after the disaster of Adowa, when he came expressly to Rome to warn King Humbert against Crispi, his reward being a month's confinement in a fortress. He is now extremely busy studying the practical working of Parliament, to which end every deputy has free audience to him daily at 11 a. m. He is represented as a man of sterling honesty, so that this initiation into political intrigues cannot fail to be a great disillusion, but will materially help to a just estimate of persons and things. He certainly starts well equipped for the race, as no sooner had he ascended the throne than by a series of acts he gained, at one bound, the love and confidence of the nation, which before had been something less than lukewarm. Now what is required for a triumphant finish is to prove himself able all energetic, and to have the true interests of a suffering country at heart. So far he has shown every disposition to fulfill this ideal.
